Rail and road commuters facing no fun but Games travel chaos

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

KENT'S commuting workforce is being warned to prepare for travel hell during the Olympics with more than a quarter of a million extra people expected to use the county's rail and road networks every day.

While excitement builds around the upcoming London Games, transport authorities are urging people using Southeastern trains to plan well ahead, with 110,000 extra passengers expected each day over the Olympic period.

And workers travelling to and from the city by road are being told categorically by Transport for London to avoid the Olympic Road Network (ORN), which includes the approach to the Blackwall Tunnel, one of the main routes into London from Kent.

Huge pressure on roads in and out of London is expected to force motorists to use the notorious Dartford Crossing, with fears it could become a gridlock nightmare, handling as many as 300,000 vehicles a day during the Games – double the usual amount.

And problems will continue during the Paralympics, with the closure of main roads by Brands Hatch race circuit near Swanley – including the A20 into London – where road cycling races and trials are taking place from September 5-8. The roads will be closed for six days from September 3.

Traders in West Kingsdown, an area expected to be most badly affected, said it will cause a huge loss in business, and residents have voiced fears over potential increased travel times, where a normal three-mile journey from the village to nearby Farningham, for example, will be a 31-mile trek due to Businesses to pay the price for Paralympic race road closures

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

TRADERS in West Kingsdown are furious that major roads are being closed for a Paralympic cycling event.

Brands Hatch motor racing circuit is being used over four days in September for cycle road racing, time trials, and team relays.

Last week Cllr Jill Davison told KoS it will boost visitor numbers, adding: "Our biggest industry is tourism and this is a showcase event."

And of the worries from concerned businesses in the area, she said: "Most of the worries have been put to one side, in the balance of having the advantage of being put on the map. The businesses were concerned about getting the traders and workers in and out, but we have planned how we can get them in the back way."

During the event a section of the A20, Scratchers Lane and Fawkham Road, will be closed.

One business that will be hit is mobile fruit and veg seller Bob Wicker.

He said: "We have formed the West Kingsdown Business and Traders Group and spoken with Sevenoaks council. The traders here have nothing against the Paralympics, but we don't feel anything has been resolved.

"The road closure means that if you live in West Kingsdown and wanted to go to Farningham, you have to go around using the M20. So instead of a two or three mile journey, you will be doing a 31 mile journey."

"When the council says all the traders here are happy, the reality is we are not, but appear to have no option other than shutting or getting all our stock two weeks early."

"I am going to lose a week of business. I do deliveries to old people's homes and the extra miles will kill our trade. I have to get to Farningham, Eynsford, Sutton at Hone, and south Darenth. Even going to market is adding over 30 miles to my journey and fuel prices [are high]."

Chris Holmes, London 2012 director of Paralympic Integration revealed tickets are selling well for the events.

And he added: "The delegate from the International Cycling Union has said this is the greatest ever course for the road cycling, it's going to be awesome for the athletes."

RACE: Traders are concerned by the extra travel costs they will incur from the road closures

Sevenoaks council said the road closures are down to Kent County Council, and the Conservative member for New Ash Green is worried for traders.

Cllr David Brazier said: "There will be pain, there is no doubt about it. Sadly it is regrettable but inevitable."

He also criticised the London Organising Committee of the Olympic and Paralympic Games (LOCOG) for ordering businesses in the area to take down their welcome signs because they mention the Games.

He said: "Some of the nurseries and businesses on the A20 are enthusiastic about the Paralympics coming to West Kingsdown saying things like 'Blogs and Co welcomes the 2012 Paralympics'."

"I thought this was pretty harmless stuff, but LOCOG have got pretty heavy about it and said they'd rather they were all taken down."

"I don't think this is a serious matter and if I was in charge of it all I would not have got myself in to a state about it."

LOCOG told Cllr Brazier compensation is highly unlikely, and the roads need to be closed because of the threat to athletes from passing traffic.

diversions onto the M20.

Transport chiefs said they were doing all they could to avoid disruption, but that congestion was inevitable.

A Highways Agency spokesman said all planned road works had been suspended, including on all those routes expected to be used as an alternative to the ORN. He said resources would also be stationed near key points should any incidents occur.

"As a key delivery partner for the Games, the Highways Agency has been working with Transport for London, the Olympic Delivery Authority and partners for some time to help ensure the roads we manage serve both the Games family and non-Games traffic," he said.

Traffic plans show that an approach lane both northbound and southbound to the Blackwall Tunnel, called 'Games lanes', will be reserved for VIPs, athletes and media representatives.

At the final approach to the tunnel, both north and south, the Games lane traffic will have to merge in with public motorists, a system expected to create a bottleneck. For people wanting to turn onto the A13, drivers will have to merge with Games traffic.

Motorists are expected to avoid the Blackwall Tunnel and instead use the Dartford Crossing during the Olympics, which run from July 27 to August 12.

But the Government has so far refused to agree to open the toll booths to allow free-flowing traffic, despite calls from council chiefs in Dartford and Thurrock, in Essex.

Road minister Mike Penning said the Government was not expecting significant increases in traffic volumes at the crossing.

"We are carefully considering how Dartford Crossing will operate," he said. "We have carried out detailed planning work with our delivery partners to ensure the road network is ready, and will continue to consider measures to help keep traffic moving at the crossing."

A Department for Transport spokeswoman told KoS there would be an announcement made next week with regards to the situation at Dartford.

For commuters using Southeastern's rail service, the situation is expected to be no better.

The Government has stressed the need to prioritise spectators and people going to the Games.

Queueing systems will be put in place at key stations, including Ashford, Sevenoaks and London terminals, to limit the number of people on platforms.

The high-speed service will become a Javelin shuttle service and will operate between St Pancras, Stratford and Ebbsfleet, with the occasional train to Faversham.

There will be a minimal high-speed service to Broadstairs, Ramsgate, Canterbury West, Margate, Minster and Sturry between July 27 and August 12, and no service at all to Folkestone stations, Dover, Deal or Sandwich.

Southeastern spokeswoman Sarah Boundy said: "We're expecting 25 per cent more people on our trains each day - more at weekends when there are free events in London. We carry around 450,000 people every weekday now, during the Olympics we expect another 110,000 each day. People must allow extra time for their journey."

Cash woes leave Ebbsfleet 'white horse' statue at the starting gate

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

MULTI-million pound plans to build a giant white horse in Ebbsfleet – expected to be the most significant public art piece since Angel of the North – have been stalled by the economic downturn.

Despite a fundraising campaign looking for parties to invest in the project, efforts have proved fruitless with a lack of sponsors coming forward to help pay for the building of the 50-metre sculpture.

The horse, designed by Turner-prize winner Mark Wallinger, is expected to cost several million pounds according to those behind the project, although speculation surrounding the final price suggests a figure closer to £12 million.

Wallinger fought off stiff competition from other internationally-acclaimed artists to win the high-profile Ebbsfleet Landmark Project (ELP) in 2009 with his ambitious design.

His horse will be 33 times larger than the Riviera Red racehorse on which he based the sculpture, and will look out over the new Ebbsfleet Valley development at Springhead.

It has been dubbed the Angel of the South and is likely to be the biggest and most significant public work of art since the development of Antony Gormley's Angel of the North in Gateshead.

Part-funded by Eurostar, Land Securities, and London and Continental Railways, Mr Wallinger's sculpture design was originally due to be completed in time for the London Olympics.

Planning permission was obtained in April, 2010, from Gravesham Borough Council, but this is likely to have to be renewed next year.

A spokesman for Land Securities said a committee of interested parties was still trying to secure funding for the project.

"We're hoping things will pick up," he said. "The planning permission runs out next year, but we don't envisage any problems getting that renewed. We funded the design, but we now have to find parties to fund the build. The economic downturn has stalled it."

He admitted the sculpture would be more expensive than initially thought.

"We have never disclosed exactly how much it will be, but it will be several million," he said.

He was unable to give a time as to when the sculpture might be built, but said it would still go ahead.

Few other details have been released about the project in stark contrast to the global wave of publicity that followed the unveiling of the horse as the winner of the ELP in January, 2009.

The commission was announced in 2007, aimed at attracting internationally-acclaimed artists.

Five designs were commissioned, but Mr Wallinger came through victorious with his ambitious horse design.

The aim of the project is to provide a high-profile symbol for Ebbsfleet Valley, the Gravesham and Dartford communities and the north Kent region to help identify Ebbsfleet Valley and Ebbsfleet International station.

At 40-50m high, the landmark will be one of the biggest artworks in the UK, comparable in scale to the Statue of Liberty.

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Arson and blackmail

ARSONIST Leroy Brown, 34, of Uxbridge Road, west London, who blackmailed a London property developer and started fires to target his victim's business and family has been jailed for an indeterminate sentence, and will serve a minimum of eight-and-a-half years. In May, 2011, Brown started a fire at what he mistakenly thought was the victim's parents home in Rainham. Ten days later, the victim's sister's house, also in Rainham, was targeted by Brown.

➔ TV chef brews a pint

RENOWNED celebrity chef Angela Hartnett has visited Shepherd Neame's Faversham brewery to find out about women's role in brewing for the BBC Two show The Great British Food Revival. The show sees chefs on a quest across the UK to investigate forgotten food traditions. Canterbury-born Hartnett was hosted by head brewer Richard Frost, who coached her through a brew of Spitfire Premium Kentish Ale. The show will be broadcast in the autumn.

➔ Ride fall girl 'improving'

A four-year-old girl who suffered critical injuries falling from a ride at Chessington World of Adventures is making "small improvements". Jessica Blake, from Sheerness, suffered a fractured skull, a bleed on the brain and broken ribs after falling 14ft from queue for the Tomb Blaster ride on June 7. She is being treated at St George's Hospital in south London. Officials from the Health and Safety Executive are currently investigating the circumstances surrounding the incident. The ride has been closed since the accident.

Strawberry fields forever as farm continues Wimbledon love affair

IF you are lucky enough to have tickets to watch Great Britain's big hope Andy Murray play at Wimbledon this weekend, you'll be able to enjoy the action while tucking into some of the 30 tonnes of Kentish strawberries on sale.

Over Wimbledon fortnight more than two million of the berries will be available with a dollop of cream, just 24 hours after being picked at Hugh Lowe Farms in Mereworth.

The farm near Maidstone has netted the position of chosen provider to the world-famous championships for the past two decades without a break, which really does give a new meaning to strawberry fields forever.

The farm is run by Marion Regan, 51, with husband Jon, 53, and its south-facing slopes means it is ideal for catching just the right amount of sun for the Elsanta variety.

The teams of 35 pickers are told to only select the very best for Wimbledon – and it's done at the very last minute so they are as fresh as possible. They have to be a good shade of scarlet over the entire surface before they can be served up to tennis fans.

Mrs Regan said: "We use a five-hectare section of the farm just for the Wimbledon strawberries. We also supply raspberries which go in the puddings in the corporate boxes. In all we have about 130 hectares of strawberries.

"Our strawberries are among the best in Britain – they are sweet, juicy and fresh and we ensure they go straight in to their own punnets, which cuts down dramatically on human handling.

"A medium-sized strawberry is what we are looking for, and they have to be soft enough to cut in half with a teaspoon, while balancing them on your knee."

The lorries head for the tennis courts on a daily basis and Mrs Regan said they haven't had any problems making the deliveries.

She said: "The weather this year has been extremely kind to us – our strawberries have peaked just as the right time for the Wimbledon fortnight. That means we have also had a good year for flavour and size. It could not be better, we are delighted."

Handshake heralded as 'wonderful' moment by Mountbatten's daughter

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

EARL Mountbatten's daughter has heralded the historic meeting of the Queen with Martin McGuinness as a "wonderful" moment.

Patricia Knatchbull, 2nd Countess Mountbatten, of New House, Mersham, lost her 14-year-old son Nicholas Knatchbull along with her father and mother-in-law in the IRA bomb which claimed four lives on August 27, 1979.

But she told the Daily Telegraph the meeting of the Queen with Mr McGuinness, a former IRA commander, had her support.

"I think it's wonderful," she said. "I'm hugely grateful we have come to a point where we can behave responsibly and positively."

The countess, 88, was badly injured by the bomb which blew up a fishing boat on which her family were enjoying a day out off the coast of County Sligo, Ireland.

Along with Nicholas, those who died in the attack were Lord Mountbatten, 79, and Paul Maxwell, 15, a local boat boy. Another passenger, the Dowager Lady Doreen Brabourne, 83, died the day after the attack of her injuries.

Countess Mountbatten's husband, John Knatchbull 7th Baron Brabourne, and her other twin son, Timothy, also received terrible injuries in the attack.

Thomas McMahon, 63, was given four life sentences for placing a bomb on board the Shadow V, but was released from prison in 1998, under the terms of the Good Friday Agreement.

But the person who detonated the remote controlled device has never been brought to justice.

An IRA statement released at the time said: "The IRA claim responsibility for the execution of Lord Louis Mountbatten. This operation is one of the discriminate ways we can bring to the attention of the English people the continuing occupation of our country."

Thirty years after the murders Timothy Knatchbull, who suffered shrapnel wounds and damage to his eye, admitted the death of his twin Nicholas has haunted him throughout his life.

He wrote a book – From A Clear Blue Sky – which reflects on his loss. He describes the book as "saying goodbye to Nick".

In it he states: "We were all so completely crushed by the bomb, we needed not just to survive, but to signal to others that we were surviving."

"And when we were all so devastated it was hard to say, 'I'm hurting, I need more time, more energy, more support, more listening'."

"The one thing I wanted most was to give support and strength to my beloved family at the worst time in our lives – and the first way I felt I could do that was to show that I was all right, I was coping, not to worry about me.

"I knew they were very worried I might not be able to carry on as a lone twin, so I automatically felt I should give them the all-clear signal as soon as I was out of hospital.

"I fooled them but, worse, I fooled myself. My emotional and mental scars were terrible and took years to come out because I clamped down on them and kept them from view."

➔ Burglars steal medals

MEDALS and memorabilia have been swiped from a home in Aylesford. Police are appealing for help in tracking down the distinctive items stolen during a burglary in Eccles. The crime happened on June 12 in Mackenders Lane. Property including military medals, a pocket watch and two chiming clocks were reported to have been stolen, as was a medal the victim was awarded for service in the fire brigade, and a pocket watch in recognition of his service.

➔ Kids back cigarette ban

A GROUP of Kent youngsters have backed calls for the introduction of plain tobacco packaging in a bid to cut the number of under 18s starting smoking. The group, called REframe, met to have their say in response to a government consultation. Every year, 340,000 children in England try smoking for the first time – and 200,000 under-16s become regular smokers. REframe is supported by Kent Youth County Council and Mid Kent College Students' Union.

➔ Police chief short reign

ANN Barnes has been re-elected for the seventh consecutive year as chair of the soon-to-be-defunct Kent Police Authority. Her election follows the annual meeting of the authority – which holds the local police force to account.

Her final year will be relatively short-lived however. In November it will be disbanded and replaced by the Police and Crime Commissioner, who will be elected by the public.

HEALTH

PFI hospital trust admits to 'difficult' future but plans merger of services

A HOSPITAL trust has denied it is spiralling into financial crisis because of its Private Finance Initiative (PFI).

Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust, which runs Darent Valley Hospital, admitted the future "looked difficult", but said it was not in the same position as South London Healthcare, which faces insolvency due to its crippling "NHS mortgage".

Under PFI, private firms pay to build hospitals, with the NHS left to pay a mortgage-like fee over 30 years.

A Dartford and Gravesham NHS spokesman said in recent years the trust had balanced its books and ended last year with a £393,000 surplus.

He stated that while things were difficult financially, moves to merge with Medway NHS Foundation Trust would ensure the future of services.

"We have balanced the books for the last few years and ended last year with a small surplus of £393,000," he said.

"However, the upcoming financial position for the NHS means the future looks more difficult, and to maintain services going forward we think an integration with another trust is the best way of protecting existing services, and indeed building on others.

"The staff at Darent Valley are innovative, flexible and totally committed to high-quality patient care.

"Although the economic landscape is challenging, the organisation has clear financial plans to create efficiencies, maintain its income and keep tight control of its costs. This means the trust can continue to serve the community and invest in new patient services."

Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS Trust, which runs the brand new £228 million Pembury Hospital, is also tied up in a PFI, with repayments of £1.7m month from a monthly income of £30m – with the repayments continuing for 30 years.

South London Healthcare formed in 2009, when Queen Mary's Sidcup NHS Trust, Queen Elizabeth Hospital NHS Trust and Bromley Hospitals NHS Trust merged to create a single hospital on several sites.

These include Princess Royal University in Bromley and Queen Mary's in Sidcup.

South London Healthcare is spending 14 per cent of its income on repayments to a PFI, and it is now insolvent.

The Government could appoint an administrator to take over the running of the hospital.

How the years fly by: never-before-seen aerial photos reveal a century of change around Kent

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

MORE than 15,000 aerial photographs from across the UK, taken nearly 100 years ago, are to go online for the first time.

And as the images on this page show, the photos provide a fascinating snapshot of our county.

Among the areas captured are Chatham, Folkestone, Dover, Maidstone, Lydd and St Margaret's Bay.

Britain from Above is the new website – www.britainfromabove.org.uk – which is run by English Heritage and the Royal Commissions on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland and Wales.

It features some of the oldest and most valuable images of the Aerofilms Collection, a unique and important archive of more than one million aerial photographs taken between 1919-2006.

The photographs featuring on the website date from 1919-53, and have gone through a painstaking process of conservation and cataloguing. Due to their age and fragility, many of the earliest plate glass negatives were close to being lost forever.

The Aerofilms Collection was acquired for the nation in 2007, when the company was facing financial difficulties.

Anna Eavis, head of archive at English Heritage, said: "The Aerofilms Collection embodies all that is exciting about aerial photography. We are pleased the items have been given safe, long-term homes, and that each of the organisations involved has been enriched by their addition."

By the end of the project in 2014, 95,000 images taken between 1919-53 will be available online, showing the changing face of modern Britain.

Chelsea Flower Show may be fading from your memory, but Jacksons Show Gardens are still here to inspire you...

Now in to the third year the Show Gardens have proved to be an attraction for visitors to the Kent Fencing company's display area, as news has got around about these inspirational displays. In the first year the project was hailed as a "mini Chelsea Flower Show" as people in the Kent area were treated to visions of loveliness more associated with the big RHS flower shows, rather than something you would expect to see in a local fencing centre.

Two of the seven existing gardens on show at Stowting have been replaced with brand new designs; these are this year's winners of the national garden design competition run by Jacksons. Entrants come from all over the country and even the continent.

The idea was thought up by Jacksons' marketing manager, Louise Tomlin: "We wanted to create more than just a fencing display. By running the national competition for garden designers to create show gardens that use Jacksons and other high quality suppliers' products, we have provided something for people to visit to get inspiration for their own garden projects. What's more, the gardens are available for people to visit all year round, rather than the few days that show gardens can be seen at the large flower shows. I am really excited about the two new gardens this year, as in the previous years the quality of the entries we had, made it very difficult to choose the winners, but we got there and now they are open and ready for visitors."

The winners are: Natural Reflections by Alison Coxhead and Within the Weave by Kari Beardsell.

Alison, a local Kent designer revealed that she did not need any encouragement to include Jacksons' products within her design. "I use them all the time and even have them in my own garden," she explained. "I try to persuade my customers to include Jacksons' fencing, gates and other garden products because using cheaper, inferior products is a mistake in the long run."

"It's important to me that the gardens I have designed stay looking good, which means my clients will enjoy them for years to come. By specifying quality products I know that they will still be looking good 25 years plus later - and that means my work is still going to be looking good, too."

Featuring in the new gardens will be the amazing new Woven panel by Jacksons, there is a clue in the name of Kari Beardsell's 'Within the Weave'. The Woven panels are catching on fast and have been an instant success with almost everyone who has seen them.

The five other gardens: The Fragrant Front Garden by Justine Jobson, The Chill Out Garden by Helen Elks-Smith, The Paradise Garden by Mary Ann Le May, Jacksons goes to the Seaside by Philippa O'Brien and The Float Garden by Silver and Gold RHS medal winning Heather Appleton have been refurbished to give them a new look, and if the last two years are anything to go by, this means there will be a stunning selection of show gardens to view from May 2012, onwards.

The gardens are open to visitors at Jacksons HQ in Stowting during the company's usual opening hours. To find out more about Jacksons Products and visiting the gardens log on to jacksons-fencing.co.uk or call 01233 750393.

Independent review says a hub airport would be too late to make a difference

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE case against a Thames Estuary airport is growing as fresh calls are made to abandon the controversial proposals and focus on existing runway capacity.

An independent report commissioned by council and business leaders found the proposed hub airport was unlikely to solve the South East's aviation problems in the foreseeable future.

Instead, it found that expanding other airports such as Stansted, Southend, and Manston in Thanet, could address short-term business needs, while an increase of flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and London City airports could create "significant potential".

'Mixed-mode' flying, where runways are used for take-offs and landings at the same time, would create an additional 20 million passengers a year at Heathrow, said the report.

Authors Parsons Brinckerhoff, a global consulting firm, said: "Due to a wide range of issues including cost, air space management, the time it would take to build, and the impact it would have on the current Heathrow site, a new hub airport in the Thames Estuary is not a feasible solution."

Kent's leaders have always argued that existing capacity should be utilised and this latest report, which was presented to the South East Local Enterprise Partnership, will come as a welcome addition to the campaign.

The report also controversially suggested additional runways should be built at existing sites, despite mass opposition to a third runway at Heathrow – something the Government recently hinted at re-examining.

"If we were designing an airport system from scratch, or had the planning freedoms or financial capabilities of some emerging economies then it would be easy to say that, yes, a new hub airport away from major conurbations with plenty of available capacity would be the right decision for the South East and the UK as a whole," the report stated.

"We are not, however, starting from scratch. We have invested heavily in the sites at Heathrow and Gatwick and need to ensure the operators at both airports are able to respond to the demand being generated by their customers, the airlines.

"Parsons Brinckerhoff strongly recommends that capacity issues need to be addressed in the next five years as waiting 12 to 15 years (best case) for a new hub airport will be too late. By that stage the UK will have lost too much ground to European competitors to justify the huge investment."

The airport plans include the construction of an international transport hub on Grain by Lord Foster or on reclaimed land in the estuary by Boris Johnson, dubbed Boris Island. Both would cost £50bn-£70bn.

This report, which will be considered in the upcoming government review into aviation, came as the London Assembly, part of the Greater London Authority, called for the Mayor of London to abandon his plans.

Members called it a "simplistic and ill-conceived vanity project" and warned it would have a devastating effect on the west London economy, with up to 100,000 jobs at risk should Heathrow be forced to close to make way for a new estuary hub.

MP for Rochester and Strood Mark Reckless joined campaigners last week to raise awareness of the fight.

"There is a large basket of options for greater runway capacity for the South East, all of which make more sense economically and environmentally than a 'pie in the sky' estuary airport," he said.

"When the government produces its paper we must use it to kill off any estuary airport option once and for all in favour of options which make economic and environmental sense."

Teen on rape charge

AN 18-year-old man from Rochester has been charged with raping a teenage girl at an Essex seaside resort. The girl was allegedly attacked behind the Adventure Island feature off Marine Parade, Southend, on April 8 last year. The teenager was charged with one count of rape and one of assault. He was released on bail to appear before Southend magistrates on July 9.

Talking to a lawyer is never going to be a barrel-load of laughs. But it doesn't have to be scary.

Hi, I'm Richard Ratcliffe and my job is trying to make sure that some of the bad things that happen to people don't get worse. But, because a lot of people think talking to a lawyer will be intimidating, they will put up with a situation longer than they need to. HERITAGE

WWII survivors asked to share their memories of the 'total war' waged against Nazi Germany

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

KENT was one of the key home front battle-grounds of World War Two, and a new project aims to preserve memories from the people who lived through the conflict.

Thousands of troops left through Kent for fighting on the Continent – hoping to see the white cliffs when they returned safely home – and Dover was known as Hellfire Corner because of the heavy bombing inflicted on the town. And of course, the Battle of Britain was fought over the county.

Now a new website – www.memoriesofwar.org.uk – has been created to allow people who lived through the war to share their experiences with future generations.

The project, developed by Dr Jane Balshaw and Malin Laudin, has already gathered hundreds of memories from around the world, and the pair are hoping more will come forward.

Dr Balshaw said: "There will come a time when there are fewer and fewer people who lived through this, and it is important we retain these stories for future generations.

"No one story about being evacuated or one story about being in the Land Army is the same.

"World War Two was the first time Britain experienced total war and it is really important that we remember the past."

The website contains more than 180 contributions so far, which have been collated over the past two years with the help of students at the University of Greenwich, which has a campus at Medway Maritime.

The pair hope it will act as an educational resource for schoolchildren and bring historical events back to life for those that struggle to relate to events that took place two generations ago.

Dr Balshaw said: "I wanted to make sure all the people who had stories to tell had the chance to tell them. We have had people looking at it from across the whole world."

TALES OF DEAD GERMAN AIRMEN WASHED UP ON THE SHORE, AND ONE SOLDIER'S LONG-DISTANCE ENGAGEMENT...

DOREEN FOREMAN, (centre ballerina) from Margate, was evacuated to Rugeley in Staffordshire as a youngster.

Mrs Foreman spoke of her five years up north which led to her friends picking up an accent, and how her foster mother became a godparent to her daughter after she moved back home.

However, she added: "I remember coming out of Margate railway station, it was a lovely day. The sky – the sky here is so much higher than it is in Rugeley, it's always a low sky there and a bit grey.

"We did have nice days, but nothing like we've got here and the relief when I came out and saw the sea. I thought, 'Oh, home at last', it was lovely."

KATHLEEN EAMES, (pictured with her family two Frenchmen and an Englishman injured at Dunkirk, from a nearby hospital) was 15 when war broke out. She lived in Farnborough.

She said: "One morning we (Kathleen and her sister) were walking down Dubbindon Lane because it was a very quiet little lane with no footpaths, just two or three gas lamps.

"It was just a quiet little country lane and we were walking down one morning and there were planes fighting overhead, and we had to suddenly dive in to a hedge because of the bullets – to me it was still all quite exciting.

"But then of course, I had no idea then that it was going to last six long years."

Kathleen later joined the Women's Royal Naval Service to avoid working in a factory after her sister suffered bad experiences at a machine works.

JOHN PLUMMER, who lives in Grove Park, London was evacuated to Folkestone in 1939, with his three sisters and brother, only to be separated into different families.

He wrote: "My early experience of a foster-parent was very unpleasant; she being both harsh and unkind. The Major's wife denied food for any alleged slightly misconduct. A strict disciplinarian no less.

"We stayed in Folkestone, about six months when the 'Big Berthas' from Calais opened up and shelled Dover and Folkestone.

"I can still recall dead German seamen being washed up on the beach wearing navy blue jumpers and hexagonal naval headdress."

KENNETH TAYLOR, from Broadstairs was deployed on the Indian Ocean as a Royal Marine after being trained at the Chatham Royal Marine Barracks.

Mr Taylor, who had just left school, volunteered for the Royal Marines after helping out as a member of the Auxiliary Fire Service.

He said: "You volunteered and joined up and all you were looking forward to was to get it finished and get back home again.

"I wrote a letter to my mother and said would you take a ring and take it over to Vera (the girl I was courting) on Boxing Day and to get engaged – I hadn't even asked her! Mum took her ring over and that was it, so that was done from long distance."

Motoring legends race through time on track day

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AFTER Fernando Alonso's spectacular Grand Prix victory at Valencia last weekend, race fans now have the chance to see historic Formula 1 machines from the 1970s – a time when playboys ruled the starting grid.

Brands Hatch has announced a sensational line up of F1 cars from the 1970s when the HSCC Superprix gets under way this weekend.

Other cars from the 80s and 90s will also be on the starting grid for a series of races on the full circuit to relive the days when the British and European Grand Prix were held at the world famous Kent track from 1964-86.

Following the cancellation of the FIA Historic Formula 1 Championship race, many of the cars that would have taken part in the event will now race in the Derek Bell Trophy alongside powerful Formula 5000 and F2 machinery, recalling the Race of Champions events from the 70s.

A huge grid for this race will include a Surtees TS9 from 1971, while the Tyrrell 006 that helped Jackie Stewart to his third and final World Championship in 1973 will be driven by historic racing stalwart John Delane.

Three cars from 1977 will also take part in the Derek Bell Trophy. An Ensign from the year when Grand Prix winners Clay Regazzoni and Jacky Ickx raced for the team is joined by a Hesketh, the team with which James Hunt built his reputation before heading to McLaren and the World Championship. The McLaren M26 that brought Hunt three wins during his title defence will also be present in the field.

A further three cars from a more modern era will be demonstrated on track between the races, including the 1990 and 1992 Benettons raced by World Champions Nelson Piquet and Michael Schumacher. Meanwhile, Piquet's 1988 Lotus 101T, carrying the coveted number 1, will provide a flavour of the turbo era.

THROUGH THE AGES: Clockwise from top left: The Derek Bell Trophy will feature the 1971 Surtees F1 car; Michael Schumacher's 1992 Benetton; and James Hunt's 1977 McLaren

As well as this incredible line up, there will be a packed programme of racing from more than 350 classic single seaters, sportscars, GTs, and saloons spanning the post-war decades.

Tickets for the Historic Super Prix at Brands Hatch on Saturday and Sunday are available on the gate from £21 with free entry for children aged 12 and under. For more information visit www.brandshatch.co.uk or call 0843 453 9000.

Water company faces claims from seaside firms hit by sewage leaks

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

FOUR businesses in Thanet have made compensation claims to Southern Water after the sewage leaks that closed the isle's seas to swimmers last month.

The closures, which cost the local economy tens of thousands of pounds, hit up to 40 traders along the Thanet coast, and some are now seeking compensation because of the closures.

Joss Bay Surfing School boss Dave Melmoth said: "The closure will certainly have an effect this year – we have had a few school lessons cancelled as a result of the pollution."

"We haven't put an exact figure on it yet, but it definitely in the thousands of pounds. Because our business relies on us going into the sea, we were one of the worst hit."

Businesses on the Thanet coast were affected by nine days of sea closures after raw sewage was discharged into the water as the plant at Foreness Point failed to cope with heavy rain.

People were told not to go into the sea at any of Thanet's beaches, or cross the high-tide line on the sand.

A Southern Water spokesman said: "We have had four applications for compensation and are working with them on an individual basis. We continue to work closely with Thanet District Council and the Environment Agency to look at what happened with this incident and what can be done to make improvements for the future."

The water company has joined the Environment Agency in making a U-turn after they both initially turned down an invite to attend a public meeting to discuss the leaks.

Chairman of Thanet District Council's overview and scrutiny panel Cllr Ian Driver was furious when both bodies declined to attend the meeting scheduled for July 17 to discuss the events that led to the problem.

Environment and waterways manager for Kent and south London Alan Cansdale initially said: "I have had advice from our regional solicitor that, given we are undertaking a formal investigation, we should not take part in the meeting."

However, Cllr Driver has now received letters from both the Environment Agency and Southern Water outlining their intention to be represented at the summit.

Cllr Driver said: "I think a lot of local people will be coming along to listen to Southern Water, the Environment Agency and Thanet council about why, when and what will be done to get it right."

"People have a right to know what went wrong and what will be taken to stop this happening again."

"A lot of local people lost money and it was also major environmental disaster. We rely on our beaches for tourism, jobs and trade."

RESCUE

Sheep saved from watery grave

EMERGENCY teams including the Animal Rescue Unit in Faversham were called out on Tuesday afternoon after three sheep fell into the River Beult.

Crews received the call for help at around 1.15pm after the three hapless animals fell into the chilly water near

The expert animal rescue team swung into action and were able to save all three animals without any harm coming to the sheep.

The creatures were then safely reunited with their owner.

Bishop of Rochester Academy's 'Secondary Taster Day'

Nearly 400 Year 5 pupils from local primary schools attended the Bishop of Rochester Academy's 'Secondary Taster Day' recently - to find out what a day in the life of a student at Chatham's newest Secondary School is like.

Pupils from 8 different primary schools in Medway visited the Academy's East Campus in Magpie Hall Road and spent the day enjoying exciting lessons such as Science, Design Technology and Music, sampling the excellent food in the Magpie Hall Café, and testing out the Academy's spacious playgrounds!

The day was designed to give these 9 to 10 year olds, who are currently in Year 5 of primary school, their first glimpse at what life will be like when they move on to Year 7 (their first year of secondary school) in just over a years time.

Mr Boxall, the Academy's new Principal, had sent an open invitation to all the nearby primary schools - welcoming their Year 5 pupils.

"We were anticipating around 200 children attending the Taster Day, but in fact nearly 400 attended on the day," said Mr Sears, Head of Lower School at the Academy, who organised the event to help children to make the transition from primary school to secondary school less daunting.

"A lot of children get very anxious about starting at Secondary School," said Mr Sears. "But visiting a secondary school in advance, meeting subject-teachers and taking part in sample lessons in specialist teaching areas such as Science labs that Primary Schools don't have really helps them. Instead of worrying about it, they're now looking forward to it!" he said.

a great success with local primary school children

Each child took part in 4 different lessons, all with an Olympic theme. Some children made vacuum-formed Olympic ice cube trays, whilst others took part in the BoRA Maths Olympiad. In Geography, they investigated the sheer reach of the Olympics across the globe, and in Dance, they had a go at choreographing their own opening ceremony.

The children also got to see the progress being made on the Academy's £23 Million new building, due for completion in Spring 2013. Those children who are successful in gaining a place in Year 7 at the Academy in September 2013 will be amongst the first students to benefit from the superb new learning environment and state-of-the-art facilities in the new Academy building.

The Pastoral Team and Owen Smith, the Academy's Chaplain, made sure that all the children felt at ease at the Academy and that they were introduced to children from other primary schools so they could make new friends. The specialist-subject teachers made sure that all the children participated fully in the exciting lessons they had prepared, and Mr Boxall, the Academy Principal, checked throughout the day that the children were not only enjoying themselves but that they would leave the Academy having learned new things during their lessons at the Academy.

Throughout the day, all the children wore T-shirts with the Academy's logo and new motto: 'Determined to Excel', and on leaving were given 'goodie bags' to take home - along with all the things they had made in their Art, Design and Food Technology lessons.

One youngster, 10 year old Harry, who attends Oaklands Junior School in Chatham, shook Mr Boxall's hand on leaving the Academy at the end of the 'Taster Day'. "He had a fabulous time!" said Harry's mum, Mrs Burrell, who had arrived to collect him. "He is looking forward to coming here full time in a years time."

Any parent with a child currently in Year 5 at primary school is welcome to visit the Academy in advance of applying for a Year 7 place there in September 2013.

To make an appointment, parents should contact Mr Sears, Head of Lower School.

Almost 94% of children and young people said living with an Action for Children foster carer had helped them, with 80% saying it had helped them a lot

Do you care?

Do you care?

Every child who comes into foster care is different.

There is no 'typical' child we place. Many have faced extreme difficulties. Some are from minority ethnic populations. Some have a range of special needs or display challenging behaviour. Some are in sibling groups which need to stay together wherever possible. All are looking for safe, caring homes with people like you.

From drivers to café workers to engineers, we help all sorts of people become foster carers, supporting them to transform the lives of the most vulnerable and neglected children and young people.

Fostering myths busted!

With over a quarter of people considering fostering, but almost 60 per cent mistakenly thinking they're not eligible, we want to bust the myths and tackle the many reasons people don't come forward.

If you've considered fostering - but didn't think you'd be eligible, then think again. You can foster!

- ▶ I don't think I'm the right age
- ▶ I'm male
- ▶ I'm gay
- ▶ I don't own my own home
- ▶ I don't have any children
- ▶ I'm single
- ▶ I haven't worked with children or young people
- ▶ I don't think they recruit carers from my ethnicity
- ▶ I can't afford to give up work

We believe the most important thing is that a child or young person is taken care of well. We need all types of carers to reflect the types of children and young people who need a place to stay. If you have experience of working with vulnerable young people, and are committed to transforming children and young people's lives, we want to hear from you.

Why choose Action for Children?

We value our foster carers very highly. Our friendly team will support you, so you can support young people to grow with hope and confidence. We are an experienced UK children's charity who put children at the centre of everything we do. We offer:

- ▶ 24-hour support
- ▶ continuous training and development
- ▶ careful matching
- ▶ regular paid breaks when you need them
- ▶ competitive allowances and fees
- ▶ support groups and social events

Children and young people in your area need foster homes

Could you give children and young people the care and support they need to thrive? If you can offer a safe and caring home, we'll give you excellent training, competitive fees (up to £420 per week), regular planned breaks and 24-hour support.

If you have experience of working with vulnerable young people, a spare room and you're up for the challenges and rewards of transforming a child's life, we want to hear from you.

CHARITY

Potter star joins £100,000 fundraiser for blind nursery

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

ACTRESS Zoe Wanamaker is supporting a major appeal to raise £100,000 in just 100 days for a special nursery that helps children who are visually impaired.

Dorton House nursery at Seal, near Sevenoaks is run by the Royal London Society for the Blind, but is in urgent need of funds so it can continue helping children to communicate and play with others, overcome mobility issues, and understand the world around them.

The Little Heroes campaign, launched last month, aims to collect £1,000 a day.

At Dorton House children play and learn in a purpose-built nursery with high contrasting coloured walls, doors and floors for those with some vision – the organisation said 85 per cent of all learning in early years is purely visual.

If a baby cannot copy what it sees, its development could be harmed.

Braille is taught from an early age, and the nursery uses different methods to allow children with and without sight to work with language and communication.

There are different textures on the wall and a vibrating floor can help those with conditions such as cerebral palsy who need stronger stimulation.

Wannamaker, (pictured) who starred in the Harry Potter films and the long-running BBC sitcom My Family, said: "All children should be given the opportunity to be the best they can be."

"RLSB's nursery does this by working with blind children at a crucial age. It helps them to be happy and independent little people, and gives parents confidence to look forward to a bright future for their child."

One star of the appeal is little Archie Gunn.

The two-year-old has a cerebral vision impairment and has just started attending the nursery.

His mother Leigh said: "Archie has become much more confident since being at the nursery."

"At first he wasn't very mobile, but now in their huge playroom he's in his element. The staff help us work out little strategies to make his life as brilliant as possible. It's given our family so much hope for the future."

The RLSB's chief executive and former investment banker Dr Tom Pey lost his sight aged 39.

The father-of-four said: "I urge people to donate so we can stop sight loss in childhood from turning into a lifelong disability."

To support the appeal go to www.littleheroesappeal.com, and texting 70007 donates £3 to the cause.

ART

Candid Emin opens up to Fry at Turner gallery talks

By Dean Kilpatrick

dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

TRACEY Emin would be dead by now if it were not for her art which she says "keeps me alive constantly".

The Margate artist made the revelation to actor Stephen Fry during a public talk at the Turner Contemporary gallery in her hometown of Margate.

The gallery is currently given over to the exhibition She Lay Down Deep Beneath the Sea, a series of new works by Emin.

During the event Emin spoke of her upbringing in Kent, her art, and a vision for the future of the town.

She told Fry: "I'm a totally serious artist and all I have ever had in my life is art. I left school when I was 13, and went back when I was 15 for a few months.

"If it hadn't been for art, I would probably have been dead by now. Art is like my lover that keeps me alive constantly."

Emin was raped as a teenager, didn't have the grades to make it into art college, and worked at Dreamland for free, but the artist said she still had a love for Margate.

She said about being back at the Kent seaside: "I never thought there would be an amazing art gallery in Margate where I am having an exhibition; where I am showing when I'm nearly 50, when I'm still alive; when everything is positive.

"I realise how lucky I am."

The 48-year-old artist has had strong critics of her work ever since her 'bed installation' which was shortlisted for the Turner Prize in 1999.

However, despite a mixed response from the art world, she became professor of drawing at the Royal Academy last year, and told the audience she held her first lesson in Margate.

Emin, who went to King Ethelbert School and attended Medway College, also spoke of her vision for the town and said art and culture was the stimulus Margate needed.

She said: "What I see is wherever art goes, regeneration goes. What I would like in Margate is a film festival. I'd like to have a massive antiques market that happens maybe twice a year and I would like to see more hotels.

"The last thing I want to see when I drive into Margate is Tesco. We want to see Margate in big flashing letters."

She spoke with passion about her hopes for the town, calling it "sexy", and told of her intention to make "make Margate look cool".

Emin added: "I'd like to see the Lido regenerated, Tony Savage to be re-born and playing the organ, and I'd like to see the beauty contest start again. It's possible, we just need the money to do it, that's all."

Fry said to her: "You are the most vulnerable artist. I don't mean this in a crude way, but you've opened your legs to the public in the sense of your sexuality, your sexual history and your femininity.

"It's very much part of who you are as an artist, which is extremely brave and tender."

The QI presenter added: "Margate has the good fortune of being the hometown of Tracey Emin.

When the people from around the world come to England, they should come to Margate. I think there should always be an Emin here."

EMERGENCY

Volunteers needed to start Red Cross emergency team

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IF YOU have the skills to help people with problems ranging from a nosebleed to their house being burnt down, the Red Cross could be just the place for you.

The organisation is looking for new volunteers to come forward to form a Tonbridge team.

It needs to set up a new emergency response group in the area, and has announced a recruitment day at the Angel Centre.

Once created, the new group will provide much-needed Red Cross services across the area including first aid support at local and national events, emergency support to Kent Fire and Rescue Service, and support to the local community should any major incidents occur.

It is a busy position, but volunteers will be fully trained in all aspects required as they will be operating alongside other teams from across the area. All workwear and equipment is supplied.

Hannah Bright, the local volunteer co-ordinator, said: "We are looking for people who are interested in using their spare time to help people in a crisis. We provide full training that prepares our volunteers to support people in stressful and emergency situations. This includes first aid, manual handling and health and safety."

"Our volunteers find the role very varied and fulfilling. You could find yourself dealing with a nosebleed at a summer fete one day and comforting a family whose home has caught fire at two in the morning the next.

ON HAND: The Red Cross provides vital support

"The time commitment is very flexible, but our presence makes a huge difference to people dealing with crisis."

The people they need have to be caring and compassionate, patient, tactful and reasonably fit and healthy. The reward of being part of the team is helping to make a big difference in local people's lives.

Anyone interested in learning more about the opportunities available for volunteering with the British Red Cross can attend The Angel Centre, Tonbridge, on August 1, at 7pm.

For more details or to register your interest in attending the meeting, contact Hannah Bright on 01622 625111 or email HBright@Redcross.org.uk.

ENVIRONMENT

£1.2m appeal to save white cliffs for future generations

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THEY have stood as a symbol of home throughout the centuries, acting as the nation's frontier at the gateway to England.

But one stretch of the famous White Cliffs of Dover – and arguably the most iconic – remains in private hands, meaning it could one day be at the mercy of inappropriate development.

In a bid to secure its future, the National Trust has launched a £1.2 million fundraising appeal to buy the stretch after the current owner offered to sell it to the conservation charity.

The Trust already looks after and manages the white cliffs, with the exception of the 1.35km sweep between the visitor centre and South Foreland lighthouse which overlooks the port.

Charity bosses say it will complete the “missing link” of coastline, uniting a stretch of more than five miles.

Assistant director, operations, at National Trust for the South East, Nic Durston, said it would allow the trust to protect the historical landmark.

ICONIC: White Cliffs of Dover

“We’ve been given the opportunity to acquire this stretch by the current owner,” he said.

“We already own a lot of Dover’s white cliffs and it means we can conserve this wonderful landscape for the nation.”

He said that if an unsympathetic owner took control of the cliff it could damage the land.

“They could take an inappropriate approach to development or reduce public access.”

“While this section of is not under threat at the moment, if it was under an unsympathetic owner that couldn’t be guaranteed,” he added.

And he pointed the recent 100ft ‘Roy the Redeemer’ statue of England football boss Roy Hodgson that was temporarily placed on the cliffs by bookie Paddy Power.

“What that kind of thing invites is heavy machinery coming onto the cliffs and damaging the landscape,” he said.

The appeal is the charity’s biggest ever coastal fundraiser, with £1.2m needed by the end of the year.

Historian and television presenter Dan Snow has thrown his weight behind the appeal.

“For me it’s simple; the White Cliffs of Dover are one of the country’s greatest and most iconic landmarks,” he said.

COMPETITION

Win a VIP visit to Tate Modern and a night at London's luxurious Hilton Tower Bridge Hotel

WE are offering one lucky reader a VIP weekend to see Edvard Munch: The Modern Eye at Tate Modern plus a luxurious stay at the Hilton Tower Bridge Hotel.

Few other modern artists are better known and yet less understood than Norwegian painter Edvard Munch (1863-1944).

This exhibition examines the artist's work from the 20th century, including 60 paintings, many from the Munch Museum in Oslo, with a rare showing of his work in film and photography.

Munch is often seen as a 19th century Symbolist painter, but this exhibition shows how he engaged with modernity and was inspired by the everyday life outside of his studio, such as street scenes and incidents in the media – including The House is Burning 1925-7.

The show also examines how Munch repeated a single motif over a long period of time to re-work it, as can be seen in his most celebrated works, such as The Sick Child 1885-1927 and The Girls on the Bridge 1902-27.

To celebrate the opening of this exciting exhibition, Tate Modern is giving one lucky winner two free tickets to see it, a souvenir exhibition catalogue and poster.

What's more, the lucky person will be able to make a weekend of it with a luxurious night's stay and breakfast at the Hilton Tower Bridge Hotel.

Set against the backdrop of one of London's best-known historical landmarks, Hilton Tower

KENT REMEMBERED

ONE AND ONLY: The Garden of England has been formed over the centuries by a unique series of factors

Unique heritage that's shaped our landscape

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE reason why Kent retains its unique countryside and architecture from past centuries is outlined in a new book about the growth of England.

Painstakingly researched and written by Harry Mount, a former Daily Telegraph writer and New York correspondent, How England made the English: From Hedgerows to Heathrow describes the national characteristics behind the look of the landscape.

It describes a population with, "a liking for old things, for smallness and gentleness; a preference for accidental, natural beauty over grand human designs".

Published by Viking Books it describes these shores as, "the most geographically varied small country in the world (which) has produced its most idiosyncratic people; and the English character and the landscape of that small country are inextricably linked".

Kent's brickwork, architecture, soil, crops, castles and churches are all featured along with its closeness to France – with consequences in times of war and peace.

One unique aspect of the county's heritage is inheritance laws which differed from the rest of the country from the 11th century until 1925, when the Administration of Estates Act standardised regulations.

The rest of England followed a law known as 'primogeniture' – where land passed to the oldest son – whereas in Kent an Anglo-Saxon law saw it equally distributed between all sons.

Known as 'gavelkind' – an old Kentish word – it was also prevalent in Wales and Ireland.

William the Conqueror is given credit for letting Kent keep its own laws as elsewhere he introduced Norman-style regulations to reinforce his royal position, although why is not clear.

But the rule led to smaller local fields and holdings, which to this day means there are few big estates, country houses, parks or grand landowning estates compared to elsewhere in the country.

The smaller plots of land also meant it was more enclosed, so there is little of the large open-field farming which is a major feature of the landscape in other counties.

The book also describes how Wealden clay produced the right growing conditions for orchards, and that the loamy soils of Thanet are ideal for fruit growing, while the stiffer clays between Whitstable and Canterbury are harder to cultivate – so the ancient woodland of Blean still survives.

As the closest thing to a frontier England possesses, Kent also needed to be well fortified and as early as 2AD the Roman Classis Britannica – or British Fleet – was based at Lympne and Dover.

Today, more castles exist in Kent than any other southern county, with Rochester boasting the highest keep in England.

Canterbury's place as the home of the Church of England is also the result of this proximity to foreign parts.

When Pope Gregory dispatched St Augustine to this country in 597AD, he made the city his foothold and eventual base and there are still remains of 10 seventh century churches built by the saint or his converts in the county.

And when cathedrals started to be built, easy import of top-quality French stone meant the central tower of Canterbury cathedral has a core of half a million bricks wrapped in limestone from around Caen, Normandy.

Publisher Viking said: "The book spans new England as well as the rolling hills and patchwork landscape of Tourist Board England: the hedge-funder's taste for Victorian terraced houses turned into minimalist white boxes and the steel reinforced concrete that changed the English city horizon."

"In England the English have been shaped by our weather geology and geography; by being a coal rich, northerly island off the edge of a vast land mass, moored between the Atlantic and the North Sea, warmed by the Gulf Stream."

Powerful case for nuclear plant

Damian Collins, Folkestone and Hythe MP, says Romney Marsh needs a nuclear power station for jobs today and to secure our youths' future

THE people of Romney Marsh need and deserve good-quality jobs, now and in the future, and recent news suggests there is cause for optimism.

The operator of Dungeness B power station, EDF Energy, has confirmed it is in talks with the National Grid and the Government about extending the plant's operating life, meaning it will be producing electricity for at least another 10 years from now.

This will be welcomed by the hundreds of people who are employed both directly and indirectly by the station, while also giving us more time to press the case for a next-generation Dungeness C plant.

In the two years since I became Member of Parliament for Folkestone and Hythe, I have probably spent more time and effort on this issue than any other.

Nuclear power is absolutely crucial to the local economy and the many jobs that are dependent on it.

The position of the Government is that it is a difficult site because of the habitats regulations, but that the "door remains open" to building a new station there.

I believe the right balance has to be struck between protecting the habitats and the future livelihoods of those on Romney Marsh.

For the last 50 years, the power stations have lived alongside habitats which are part of an evolving landscape. The shingle has regenerated so successfully that the land itself now has a very high designation protection.

The site where a new nuclear station would go has been marked out, on land which has already been largely disturbed where the first two were built.

The decommissioning of Dungeness A will also free up about seven hectares which could be used as a construction site to support the building of a new C station, complete with an existing access road.

The loss of protected natural habitat, which is the sole objection of Natural England to any new build, could be therefore be avoided.

Thousands of jobs would be created in the construction of a new facility and I have already asked the Government to review the advice it was given and look at the case again.

I will reinforce this message in my upcoming meeting with the new secretary of state for energy, Ed Davey.

There is also the issue of building a nuclear waste storage facility, which Shepway District Council is consulting on. We should have this debate, but I believe we can do better for the future of the Marsh.

If it is built, my concern is it will be enormously disruptive to the economy.

I believe the right balance has to be struck between habitat and the people

It would be the equivalent of building the Channel Tunnel again, but instead of a high-speed rail connection to the Continent, it will just be a hole in the ground.

At present 70 per cent of waste is currently above the ground in Cumbria, so it is hard to see why the Government would go to the trouble and expense of transporting it to the other side of the country.

It would also need to be built some distance inland away from the protected areas, not near the existing power stations, plus no jobs would be created until the start of construction in 2025, and when it started operating in 2040.

What Romney Marsh needs is a new power station while attracting other companies to come and invest here, to create jobs and opportunities for our residents today and to secure the future for our young people.

Don't let travel chaos spoil your excitement

TRAVEL during the Olympics is without a doubt going to be hellish for a lot of people.

And those who missed out on tickets and find themselves stuck on a packed train or gridlocked motorway are likely to feel particularly resentful.

But however awful the travel situation, the excitement should counteract that. With Kent hosting the Paralympic road cycling and several training camps, the buzz is going to be inescapable.

We're on the doorstep of the biggest sporting event in the world, we have two stopovers for the Torch which is spending more time here than any other county, and we've two residents who have qualified for the Games. Can't we put up with a bit of travel chaos?

Festival season is here

KENT'S festival season has officially started at the Hop Farm, to be closely followed by Lounge on the Farm.

Or for those who prefer to avoid dancing in muddy fields, Wimbledon is back and can be enjoyed at home. Either way, there'll be something to help forget last weekend's football pain.

Cameron is distracting us

DAVID Cameron has again sought to blame the poor and unemployed for the problems of this nation. He claims there's a culture of entitlement among those who claim housing benefit, especially the under 25s it seems.

A single person who's unemployed isn't better off than someone on minimum wage. Over 35s in Shepway are given around £80pcm less than can be earned on the minimum wage, even when you take into account free prescriptions. Those under 35, because of changes to housing benefit, are given a further £150pcm less. Taking housing benefit from under 25s will mean they have about £345pcm to live on, including paying rent and council tax.

This is not about a culture of entitlement. David Cameron is relying on two things. Firstly, the poor and unemployed won't vote as they feel every party is lying to them.

Secondly, people want someone to blame for their suffering. David Cameron has no intention of making his rich cronies accept their share of the blame, so he is using this as a distraction to divide and conquer the public.

The only real solution to this financial crisis is growth and an end to tax avoidance and evasion. The best way to do this, instead of throwing money at the banks, is to give people the means to improve their finances and to spend, by offering cheap loans direct to the public to help them get out of debt permanently.

Building needs to be prudent

"ASHFORD needs more houses" and "hard choices must be made" are Ashford council's repeated response to criticism of its housing strategy. Is it true?

The council claims to have created 7,000 new jobs. Official figures show Ashford has only 400 more jobs now than it had in 2004. With an increase of 7,800 in population over that period, jobs haven't kept pace with people.

The council is scrapping its housing targets to use a jobs-led approach to forecast housing needs. The right approach, but on past jobs record housing needs will be modest. With 500 long-term empty houses and more than 14,500 new houses in the pipeline for completion by 2030, the council's jobs-based forecast of 14,470 new houses needed by then will be met.

The developers of Cheesemans Green have been offered a government sweetener of £23,000 per house to start building 100 houses earlier than market forces dictate. Supply will soon exceed demand, pushing down local house values.

The council says extra housing at Chilmington and Tenterden is needed as Ashford's economy will out-perform not just Kent, but the South East and the rest of the UK. Based on the past, this is a wildly optimistic and totally irresponsible basis for promoting developments of that scale. We all want Ashford to prosper, attract inward investment, its residents to have better jobs, better education and be better off. But just building houses will not make this happen.

The argument is clear. Be realistic and prudent with our environment. Build the houses in the pipeline, but on old sites not green fields, create real new jobs and postpone irreversible and unnecessary development until we know where the economy is going.

Gay marriage a waste of time

CAN I reply to last week's letters and Charlotte Stuart's reference to gay marriage. It is my belief this small minority should not be allowed the sacrament of marriage. Why?

1) For thousands of years the principle of marriage was a man and woman making a contract to live together, for the procreation of children, the bringing together of two families and most importantly for the love of each other.

2) There no need for homosexuals to marry? They have civil partnerships, which give same-sex couples rights identical to civil marriage.

3) A civil partnership is a relationship between two people of the same sex so a normal-sexed couple cannot have a civil partnership.

4) Two spinsters went to the European Court because they wanted a civil partnership, as it would protect them from inheritance tax. They were refused as they were sisters.

5) The civil partnership is legislation for homosexuals and lesbians, so why cannot heterosexuals have a state of partnership purely for them, something we call marriage.

6) She supports LGBT which is a Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transvestite organisation. How does a bisexual marry? Does she want marriage to involve three people?

This gay marriage issue is not about equality it is about a very small minority getting power above the majority. The homosexual/lesbian community have so many extra rights, they have legislation that gives positive discrimination in jobs such as civil servants, police, fire service, etc, they are not given jobs on their ability first and foremost.

Governments seem to have an unhealthy interest in obscure sexual habits, that says more about them then it does the ordinary man.

The Office for National Statistics says 480,000 (one per cent) consider themselves gay or lesbian, and 245,000 (0.5 per cent) bisexual. That's 1.5 per cent of the population. Why is the Government wasting time and money on a minority – there are more important issues.

Martin Clarke, Sittingbourne

Majority are being ignored

THE mass demonstrations against the invasion of Iraq were ignored, the petition for an EU referendum squashed, the promises made to get elected have been ditched with serious issues shelved.

So what does the Government agonize about? Gay marriage. Why are the majority always ignored and minorities pandered to?

For millennia 'marriage' has been defined as between two people of the opposite sex, usually for the procreation of children. Why is there such a desperate need to change the definition of another word, when even numerous gay people have said it is wrong? There are more serious issues.

Maybe next time the majority want something done and the Government isn't listening, they should enlist the help of some minority.

Friendly society offers safe (but small) return

Q HAVE you heard of the Foresters Friendly Society? Is it safe, and is its monthly tax-exempt scheme worthwhile?

A FRIENDLY societies began in Victorian times as a way for ordinary people to save. They are mutual organisations, owned by their members. The Foresters (0800 988 2418) is pretty typical. It has been in business for about 175 years, and is still allowed to offer tax benefits to small savers. Its monthly scheme lets you invest £15-£25 each month for 10 years or longer, and you get a share in the profits of the society. This is tax-exempt, and does not affect any other tax-free savings you might have, such as a cash Isa. Friendly societies are regarded as a bit plodding, so do not expect dramatic profits, but you can expect to be safe. The Foresters is fully licensed by the Financial Services Authority.

Q WE HAVE just received the annual renewal form for our home and contents insurance, and one of the questions asked is whether anyone in the house has any criminal convictions. Does the insurance company have the right to ask this? If so, can you explain why? Our son was convicted last year of a minor drugs offence and for taking someone's car without their consent, but neither of these offences was in any way connected to our home.

A THE insurance company does have the right to ask about convictions. You can refuse to answer, but the chances are that the company would then refuse to renew your policy. It is a sad fact that if someone living in the property has a conviction, there is more chance of a claim on the policy. The claim need not be because your son steals from you or damages your home, but it could well be that he knows people who might steal or cause damage. If you do not declare the convictions, and later make a claim on the policy and the insurance company discovers your son's record, your claim could be turned down just because you did not tell the truth on the renewal form. Your premiums may rise, but if you want to be insured, the only safe thing to do is come clean now.

Q MY daughter booked a holiday with friends and paid a £200 deposit on her credit card. She paid the balance by cheque after being told there would be a surcharge if she used her Visa card. Now the group has been told there are problems with the hotel and they may have to stay elsewhere or be split up. She is afraid the hotel company may be going bust. If it does, what are her rights?

TONY HETHERINGTON
MONEY CLINIC

A ACCORDING to the details you gave me, your daughter and her friends arranged their own travel by car and booked the hotel themselves, so the protection that applies to most package holidays will not work here. If the hotel owners try to make changes that are not covered by your daughter's booking agreement, she can simply say no and ask for her money back. Of course, if the company is in trouble this might not work. There is one big gleam of hope, though. Your daughter paid the hotel deposit by credit card. This means she is covered by the law that makes the card issuer jointly liable if something goes wrong. It does not matter that she paid the balance by cheque. So, if everything turns sour, tell your daughter to contact the card company, and say she wants to make a claim under Section 75 of the Consumer Credit Act. This should mean that she will get all her money back.

Q OUR fixed-rate mortgage ends soon. We like the idea of a base rate tracker, but if the base rate rises, could we then switch to a fixed rate?

A SEVERAL lenders, including Woolwich, Nationwide and the Yorkshire Building Society, offer tracker mortgages that allow you to switch later to a fixed rate. Consult a local broker for the best deal.

Q I WOULD like to invest my modest savings in a fixed-interest bond or account that pays monthly interest and is completely safe. I have found an account that yields 3pc interest, and I wonder whether you know of anything better?

A UNITED National Bank (<https://unbonlinesaver.com>) offers a one-year fixed-interest account that yields 3.45pc on a minimum investment of £2,000. You can choose to leave your money untouched and earn interest of 3.45pc, or you can opt for a monthly income with interest at 3.4pc.

Be sure to byte back over banking glitch

The shambles at the Royal Bank of Scotland group has taken days to be sorted out, and the knock-on effects could last for some time. Millions of worried bank customers – and not just those people who have accounts at RBS or Natwest – are looking for answers. Personal-finance editor ADAM AIKEN answers some of the key questions raised by the problem...

I BANK AT NATWEST OR RBS

IF YOU are one of the 17.5 million customers of RBS, Natwest or Ulster Bank, the group has promised you will not be left out of pocket.

If you are in a short-term dire situation, you can go to a branch to ask for emergency cash.

Although the bank has promised to do all it can to help, it might be worth taking as much evidence as you can.

For example, your employer might be prepared to write a note confirming your wages have been paid into the system.

Branches were open throughout last weekend, and were open for longer than usual during the week, too. There were also extra staff in the call centres.

WHAT ABOUT NON-RBS CUSTOMERS WHO ARE AFFECTED?

IT'S not just payments to and from RBS accounts that were affected. For example, company A's salary from RBS might not have arrived in Person B's account at Lloyds TSB in time, and Person B's standing order to Person C's Barclays account might have bounced, and Person C's direct debit to Company D's HSBC account might not have gone through, either.

In other words, there could a whole trail of bounced transactions and subsequent bank charges that need to be sorted out.

The banking industry generally will try to make sure no-one is left out of pocket, for several reasons.

First, the root of the problem is clear – it's not consumers' fault.

Second, other banks and building societies will not want to receive their share of the anger that is in the air at the moment.

Finally – although it's unlikely they will say so publicly – there will be a number of institutions that watched this whole thing unfold and thought "There but for the grace of God go I".

The most important thing to do is

CREDIT CRISIS: Make sure you keep a note of any discrepancies to your account monitor your account closely over the next few days.

If you have any problems, keep a note of the details and contact your own bank or building society as soon as possible. It should then liaise with RBS on your behalf.

WHAT ABOUT CREDIT SCORES?

THE RBS group has said it will work with other banks to make sure credit histories are not affected.

This is an important point because a black mark on your credit score can impact your ability to take out future loans, credit cards and mortgages. It might even affect things such as new mobile phone contracts.

Because of the chain of events such as the one outlined above, there may be people who have never been near an RBS or Natwest branch in their lives who are affected by this.

The best thing to do is wait for a few weeks and then contact the credit reference agencies (Experian, Equifax and Callcredit).

This will cost you £2 a go (although there are often free trial periods for new customers), but it's something you should do on a regular basis anyway as your credit report can help you prevent ID fraud.

If you spot any black marks on your credit history that are a result of the RBS fiasco, contact the bank or company that made the entry and ask it to amend it.

Entrepreneur is looking out for Kent's forward-thinking firms

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

ONLINE business resource Smarta has announced the launch of a competition to find the UK's most innovative businesses – and its founder wants to show what Kent companies have to offer.

Entrepreneur Shaa Wasmund, from Whitstable, said the county's firms had many good ideas and so many forward-thinking members of the business community – and this needed to be shown on the national stage.

The overall winner of 2012 Smarta 100, which is co-sponsored by O2, will receive £10,000 in cash; there are other prizes on offer.

"We are trying to find the 100 smartest businesses in the UK," said Wasmund, speaking during a break from addressing a conference of European entrepreneurs in Madrid.

"These may not be the ones with the highest turnover or the most profitable. They may be smaller companies, which are often overlooked when it comes to awards.

"If you're running a small business that stands out from the crowd that grows fans and followers as well as just customers, and you feel is worthy of national recognition, we want to hear from you.

"We're delighted to welcome O2 back as headline partner of the Smarta 100 to help us find and celebrate the most exciting entrepreneurs in the UK."

Businesses can apply online at www.smarta.com/100 and the closing date for applications is Saturday, September 1.

"As I am from Kent myself, I would love to see as many businesses as possible from the county being put forward," said Wasmund, whose business offers authoritative advice and help for small companies.

An all-star line up of judges will look at the entrants.

They include Theo Paphitis, from Ryman and star of Dragons' Den; Rowan Gormley, founder of Naked Wines and winner of the Smarta 100 in 2011; Mike Soutar, founder of Shortlist and Stylist magazines; Thea Green MBE, founder of Nails Inc; and Andy McLoughlin, founder of British technology success story Huddle.

Alongside the first prize are six special awards, with each winner receiving £1,000. These are:

- Innovation – sponsored by Brother
- Resources – sponsored by Simply Business
- People – sponsored by NatWest
- Marketing – sponsored by Seven Hills
- Technology – sponsored by Intuit

- Social Impact – sponsored by Social Enterprise UK

Chairman of judges Theo Paphitis said: "I'm delighted to be joining the Smarta 100 search for this year's most exciting small businesses.

"I admire people with the passion and energy to build their own businesses and can't wait to discover the enterprising, game-changing big businesses of tomorrow that I know are out there."

Ben Dowd, business director, O2 UK, said: "The Smarta 100 is an excellent opportunity to showcase the brilliant British businesses that are revitalising the national economy through their ambition and innovation.

"We want to celebrate but also create a forum for sharing how businesses are thinking differently, becoming more agile and changing their business model to respond to the economic climate.

"First and foremost at O2 we want to help British business and we believe we can, through our people and our solutions. The Smarta 100 gives us an opportunity to immerse ourselves in those businesses in the UK to gain insight into what they are doing to grow and thrive."

PUBLIC RELATIONS

New venture a Shore thing for talented pair

COMMUNICATIONS specialists Michele Brailsford and Jane Millington have pooled their skills to provide a new service for east Kent firms.

Shore Communications is operating in Folkestone and Dover and was formed by the women, who first met when they worked at a London corporate communications agency.

"We have extensive experience of working for leading companies in multiple sectors, including healthcare, retail, banking, education and telecommunications," said Brailsford, who previously worked as a journalist on regional and national newspapers.

"Combining this with our knowledge of this area's unique demographic means we are ideally placed to create communications packages that perfectly meet our clients' needs."

Working closely with an established network of print and web designers, photographers and printers, Shore Communications can produce:

- magazines
- E-newsletters
- websites
- press releases
- marketing brochures
- annual reports

"In such a tough economic climate, it's even more important for businesses to make sure they are getting their message to the right audience," said Millington.

TRAVEL

Dover the perfect 2013 port of call as cruise companies book in early

THE Port of Dover is set to host 149 cruise calls during the 2013 cruise season.

Ships from prominent cruise organisations including Fred. Olsen, Saga, Holland America, Princess Cruises, MSC and six-star luxury cruise lines Crystal Cruises and Seabourn Cruise Lines will all return to Dover Cruise Port during their voyages.

These are in addition to the AIDA Cruise Line, which will be bringing another new ship to Dover called the AIDAstella, which will set course on its maiden voyage through Northern Europe on March 17, following its Christening ceremony. A new four-day city tour will take passengers from Hamburg to Amsterdam and Dover in March and April.

Carnival Cruise Lines will also be returning to Dover, with the Carnival Legend operating nine turnaround calls for a variety of northern European itineraries.

In addition, MSC will have nine port calls, enabling passengers to experience the delights Kent has to offer as part of their tour.

The MSC Poescia was a recent visitor to the port and hosted a presentation on the attractions of Cyprus.

Kate O'Hara, head of business delivery at the Port of Dover, said: "First-class levels of service, excellent facilities and a wealth of shore excursion opportunities, coupled with a high-speed rail service to the centre of London, have contributed significantly to the continuous growth we are enjoying.

"Our repeat customers already know there's no better way to start a European cruise."

AWARDS

Childrenswear store dressed for success

TUNBRIDGE Wells-based Childrensalon, the designer childrenswear store, has won two categories at the Drapers and Retail Week PayPal retail awards.

Competing amongst the best from online retail, including household names such as ASOS and House of Fraser, Childrensalon walked away as a winner in both the Best Customer Experience category and the PayPal Award For Overall Excellence.

The company was also highly commended for the Best Independent Retailer award.

Chief executive Michele Harriman-Smith said: "Being recognised for our customer experience is very special to us. Commitment to our customers is at the heart of everything we do and I see it as an affirmation of our customer-centric approach."

Digital experience director Sorcha Harriman-Smith said: "The Award For Overall Excellence is a fantastic achievement. It reflects our incredible team, technology and our approach to online that allows us to learn and innovate at a very fast pace while staying true to our values.

"This brings us one step closer to our vision of being the best-loved childrenswear shop in the world."

All finalists went through a rigorous evaluation process, performed by a panel of 14 leading retail and business experts.

Job-seekers told to be flexible when looking for work to boost their prospects of success

AS the economic forecast continues to be uncertain, employers are becoming more cautious about taking on new staff, according to a survey.

And experts are urging the county's job-seekers to be as flexible as possible when it comes to looking for opportunities.

A report by the Recruitment and Employment Confederation (REC) and management accountancy KPMG showed a modest rise in permanent placements in May but at the slowest growth rate of the last five months.

The REC's report looked at data from 400 UK recruitment and employment consultancies.

But the report paints a very different picture for temporary staff recruitment, pointing to a surge in hiring in certain sectors such as financial services.

Carmen Watson, managing director of the UK's biggest temporary recruitment company, with more than 200 branches across the UK, said: "As the economy continues to slow down, demand for temporary workers is rising, especially in certain sectors such as financial services, energy and logistics.

"More and more companies are using temporary staff to help them expand their bandwidth to cater for surges in workload without being saddled with unwanted overheads in fragile economic conditions.

"Some sectors are moving in a counter-cyclical trend to the current economic conditions and are on a more permanent growth path such as technology and logistics, and it is entirely possible many of the temporary staff taken on will become permanent positions.

"We strongly urge candidates in Kent to be as flexible as possible when applying for jobs. Despite high numbers of unemployed, there are still many jobs that remain unfilled and provide opportunities for those who broaden their horizons."

TURNING THE TIDE: Roger House says many of the county's small firms would like to take on more staff but a lack of funds is holding them back

Unemployment falls in every district for a second month

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE number of people unemployed in Kent fell by 668 to 36,934 last month, with every district across the county seeing falls in their jobless figures.

Figures show that this is the second consecutive month this has happened.

Roger House, Federation of Small Businesses chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "The fall in Kent unemployment by 668 is good news, but we must not get complacent. Our spring FSB Kent Small Business Barometer shows that one in five small firms has cut jobs since last year.

"They do want to grow and take on more employees but are being held back by higher operating costs, a lack of credit from the banks and a squeeze on spending.

"Our FSB national 'Voice of Small Business' Index shows four in 10 small firms are having their applications for finance turned down and we know that many small firms have missed growth opportunities because they can't access the money they need.

"There needs to be alternative sources of finance that small firms can tap into if the nation wants to see unemployment fall further."

The number of UK self-employed was up by 84,000 to 4.7 million according to the same set of statistics. House said: "It is great news that more people are taking the leap and going it alone as the record high in self-employment shows.

"With many people struggling to find work or a full-time job, we should be doing all we can to help those with entrepreneurial spirit to set up in business and the FSB Real-Life Entrepreneur campaign seeks to help people at every stage of their business life-cycle."

"The Government's New Enterprise Allowance scheme is an excellent idea but needs to be extended if we want to see more budding entrepreneurs turn their ideas and enthusiasm into action."

High-flying graduate Jessica raises the bar to join ranks of top county law firm

ONE OF Furley Page's recently-qualified solicitors has become the latest addition to the Kent law firm's rapidly-expanding corporate team.

Jessica Gidley, 26, from Canterbury, who spent two years training with Furley Page, now specialises in corporate and commercial work, including guiding clients through business sales and acquisitions, reviewing, drafting and negotiating commercial contracts and advising on copyright, trademark and design-right issues.

Gidley, a former pupil at the Weald of Kent

Grammar School in Tonbridge, joined Furley Page as a legal assistant in 2007 after graduating from the University of Kent.

She completed her legal-practice course at City University in London, where she obtained a distinction and was awarded the Martin Dockray Prize for gaining the highest overall exam results that year.

Gidley gained experience in the firm's top-ranking corporate and commercial dispute-resolution teams before qualifying as a solicitor in 2011.

She is based at the firm's Thames Gateway office at Chatham Historic Dockyard.

High earners must take stock before change to child benefit comes in CHANGES to the taxation of child benefit due to take effect in January of next year could leave many higher-income parents out of pocket, according to financial analysts.

From Monday, January 7, any taxpayer with an adjusted net income of more than £50,000 will be hit with a new income-tax charge on the child-benefit payment either they or their partner receives.

The charge comes into effect once income exceeds £50,000 and increases on a sliding scale until income exceeds £60,000, at which point the charge amounts to the full annual benefit entitlement – thereby stripping any person earning £60,000 or more of all their own or their partner's child-benefit payments.

According to DSH Chartered Accountants and Business Advisors, however, high-earning parents may be able to offset the loss of all or some of their child-benefit entitlement by managing their finances more effectively.

Alison Turner, based at DSH's offices in Maidstone, said there were a number of options available to those affected.

"This radical change to the child-benefit system is expected to affect the tax positions of more than one million parents across the UK, but with some careful planning they could avoid or minimise the financial loss," she said.

"For example, by increasing pension contributions or by taking advantage of any salary-sacrifice schemes available that are offered by their employer, parents could manage their net adjustable income to fall below the £50,000 threshold.

"Taxpayers who do not wish to pay the new income-tax charge may simply decide to opt out of receiving child benefit.

"However, as this may affect their National Insurance credits, which in turn will affect their future entitlement to a state pension, it is advisable for them to remain registered in the system – even if they do not actually receive any child benefit.

"One additional consequence of the new tax charge will be that hundreds of thousands of child-benefit recipients will be required to complete a self-assessment tax return for the first time."

Training, courses and careers

Why vocational qualifications could build you a future in the construction industry

YOUNG people across Kent and the South East are being asked to consider vocational qualifications as an essential and practical route into construction – especially in these times of economic uncertainty.

The call came from CITB-ConstructionSkills as part of this year's Vocational Qualifications (VQ) Day.

VQ Day was a national celebration of vocational qualifications, including apprenticeships and other work-based learning paths.

The Sector Skills Council and Industry Training Board for construction used VQ Day to showcase some of its success stories, and to demonstrate to young people that vocational qualifications can provide them with practical sector and job specific skills and knowledge, helping to improve their employability within an increasingly challenging job market.

Sara Pearce, sector strategy manager for CITB-ConstructionSkills South East, said: "Vocational qualifications, such as NVQs, diplomas and apprenticeships, are becoming more and more important for people who want to work in industry, especially construction.

TRAINING DAY: A vocational course could lead you to a career in construction

"They help workers develop the sophisticated skills they need and give hands-on experience that will stand them in good stead throughout their careers.

"With high quality tutors and trainers, construction vocational qualifications are on a par with any academic qualification.

"I would encourage more young people to consider construction as a career and to look at the vocational options available to them.

"The support you receive and the skills you gain are second to none and will open doors into an exciting industry that is vital to the success of the economy."

CITB-ConstructionSkills works on behalf of employers to bring new blood into the building industry.

It is responsible for ensuring the correct training is available for those interested in working in the industry as well as supporting employers to take on new workers, such as apprentices, and works closely with education and industry partners to ensure this happens.

Ms Pearce continued: "One of the most important vocational routes into construction is an apprenticeship, which can offer an invaluable step into a career for young people, whilst being good for business.

"They also help to ensure the industry avoids skills shortages in the future by securing talent now.

"However, if we are to keep attracting the very best recruits we must ensure we work together to support this vital pool of talent, and that quality apprenticeships and job opportunities are available to these young people."

Vocational qualifications can benefit both young people looking to start their careers, as well as adults already working in the industry.

For more information on vocational qualifications or a career in construction you can visit www.bconstruction.co.uk/.

CITB-ConstructionSkills is the Industrial Training Board for the construction industry in Great Britain.

It works to ensure that construction employers have the right skills, in the right place, at the right time by investing funds and providing a wide range of industry-led skills and training solutions.

It is also a partner in ConstructionSkills, the Sector Skills Council for the construction industry, and raises employer engagement in training, providing labour market insights on future skills needs.

ACHIEVING WITH CONFIDENCE

College is getting down to business courses at its redeveloped campus

NORTH West Kent College will be offering business courses at its newly redeveloped Gravesend campus from September.

They will be in conjunction with the business courses already running at the Dartford campus.

The business BTEC Level 3 extended diploma covers marketing, law, finance and human resource management, which give an grounding for career progression in the business world.

The course links with Career Academy UK, which offers mentoring for learners and progression to a six-week paid internship with blue chip companies at Canary Wharf.

Associate director for business and computing, Stephanie Cassidy said: "The qualification that our learners gain is highly recognised by employers and the link to the Career Academy really inspires and motivates our learners."

September will also see the launch of the information and creative technology level 2

BTEC certificate. The course is designed to give the learner a general knowledge of a variety of computing elements. This will cover creative digital animation; software and website development; installation and maintenance of computer hardware; and installation and customisation of software.

The college says it offers a range of business, secretarial and computing courses at both the Dartford and Gravesend campuses, including level 1 and 2 diplomas in administration; the level 3 course which develops skills needed by personal assistants; plus ILEX Legal secretarial courses at level 2 and 3.

Computing has courses available in a range of areas from the IT user, IT technician and creative media enabling progression into employment areas including: IT support, networking, development marketing, gaming, software engineering and web development.

Raymond wins a royal scholarship

A CARPENTRY apprentice at Canterbury College has won a prestigious scholarship to improve a stately home recently saved by Prince Charles.

Raymond Alvsavag, 23, from Chartham, is one of only 10 people to be awarded a scholarship on the Building Skill In Craft Apprenticeship Scheme which is run by the Prince's Foundation. After he completes a Level 3 NVQ in wood occupations at the college, Raymond will join the Prince's Foundation at Dumfries House in Scotland.

The summer school will see students design and construct a garden feature on the Dumfries Estate, with input from the local community.

The project begins in July and will be completed in November. The rest of Raymond's apprenticeship will see him working on a variety of projects across the UK, learning from master craftsmen in his field.

The judges were impressed by Raymond's application, which included samples of his college work. He said: "I was amazed to get it. Working there is going to be a big honour."

A Prince's Foundation spokesman said: "Craft skills are dying out in the UK and it is vital that we help to preserve them and it is through the enthusiasm and commitment of apprentices such as Raymond that this will be achieved."

Colleges celebrate as top teachers take the plaudits in annual awards

MIDKENT College is celebrating the achievements of two lecturers recognised with distinctions in the 2012 Pearson Teaching Awards.

Steve Casey and Michaela Ward were shortlisted from a record number of nominations.

Nominations are received in the form of online thank-you messages to teachers or lecturers who have made a real difference, with each considered by the Pearson Teaching Awards judging panel.

Steve Casey, 42, from Gillingham, is programme area leader for engineering at Mid-Kent College's Medway Campus and has received a distinction in the category of Further Education Lecturer of the Year (London and the South East).

Michaela Ward, 26, from Rainham, has now relocated to Exeter but was an A-level biology teacher at the Medway Campus at the time of her nomination. She has received a distinction in the category of Outstanding Use of Technology in Education (London and the South East).

MidKent College acting principal Sue McLeod said: "This is fantastic news and we are delighted that both Steve and Michaela have been recognised by the Pearson Teaching Awards panel."

John Bartlett from Bromley College of Further and Higher Education also received a commendation for FE Teacher/Lecturer of the Year.

Junior school racing drivers feel the need for speed in competition

THE magnificent seven battled it out for the title of Thanet's top junior school racing team.

Seven teams were on the starting grid for the seventh annual green power battery car challenge in the grounds of the Chatham and Clarendon Grammar Federation, in Ramsgate.

Competition was fierce as the specially-designed cars powered their way round the circuit in an endurance race, and a skills test.

The lead in the endurance race changed hands several times until St Peter's juniors emerged race winners.

But Drapers Mills School in Margate were the overall winners for best average results in all categories – including the race, skills test, team presentation, design portfolio, greenest car, and the teacher's race.

Competition organiser Lester Edmeades said: "It is great to have a new overall winner this year – Drapers Mills has never taken the top prize and the team are deserved champs."

"Once again the high level of enthusiasm, dedication and support was astounding and all the competitors deserve a huge 'well done'."

"Thanks also go to our excellent team of race

CARS: The winning St Peter's team in the pits marshals, time-keepers and track builders, and Ling Metals for supplying 1,000 tyres to help us create the circuit."

The competition began following the success of Chatham House in the national green power battery car championships over the last decade when they have consistently been in the top 10 in the UK.

A build-a-car project was launched as part of the Chatham House science and technology link with junior schools, and the junior kit car grand prix flourished.

University's chemistry activity day for pupils goes off with a big bang

MORE than 250 school pupils learned about the science behind everyday things such as toothpaste, tap water, putty and glowsticks at a University of Greenwich chemistry activity day.

Chemistry at Work, organised by the university's school of science, saw a team of scientists put on activities for the students aged 14 and 15. The event took place at the university's Medway Campus.

Activities included an explosives demonstration caught on a high-speed camera, a fire power demonstration, identifying poisons, fingerprinting and DNA detection, fitness tests, and magnetic power.

Dr Samantha Booth, the school of science outreach coordinator, said: "The day was a great success, and the students and teachers thoroughly enjoyed themselves. It was absolutely brilliant."

"The aim of Chemistry at Work is to highlight the many different career paths for students who choose to pursue science at A-level. A lot of the students said they didn't realise what opportunities there were, and that it had opened doors for them."

The schools taking part were Hartsdown Technology College, Margate; Northfleet School for Girls; The Judd School, Tonbridge; St George's C of E Foundation School, Broadstairs; Dover Grammar School for Boys; Rainham School for Girls; and Crowns Wood College, Eltham.

THE INTERVIEW

Neil Buchanan

A rare attack of popular art

The former children's TV presenter talks to Joe Bill about modern art and not being dead

THE art critics only like art that we, the public, don't understand. All that does is justify their lofty position, because they are the only ones who do understand it..."

Less than 10 years ago, Neil Buchanan fronted an art show that was beamed out to more than six million viewers every week. Running for 17 years and 500 episodes, Art Attack took children's television and, in particular, art shows, to a new level.

He said: "I don't like the poncy art world – people talk about how wonderful a painting is when really we are all standing there thinking it's a load of codswallop. Then they whack a £40,000 price-tag on it and we still don't know whether to hang it upside down or back to front. There is a lot of nonsense in the art world."

"That's what Art Attack was, it was the art show for people who don't like art."

For most 20- to 35-year-olds in Britain, Neil Buchanan was part of their childhood. The man who brought art to the masses from the Maidstone TV Studios is remembered fondly as one of the cornerstones of children's TV.

Overcoming vicious internet rumours of his death, Buchanan returns with his latest exhibition, inspired by his frustrations with the 2012 Olympics. He said: "I launched my first collection last year, which was Hope Street, and now we have Backstreet Games."

Buchanan will display his new art pieces at bistros and small venues around the UK, starting with Woods Restaurant in The Pantiles at Tunbridge Wells, just a short distance from his East Sussex home in Peasmarsh.

Explaining his new work, he said: "I knew everyone would be going Olympic-crazy, but I also thought at some point everyone will become sick of the bloomin' Olympics. So I decided to go the opposite way."

"I think it is a great event – I think it's awesome – but I'm cynical about all these people who talk about legacies."

"These people are making a huge amount of money by protecting words such as 'Olympics' and 'London 2012' by clamping down on charities and schools who try to use those words to celebrate and inspire young people. But they throw us a little titbit by talking about legacies. What is the legacy for people outside of east London? If you want to talk about legacy and inspiring young people, the bottom line is that they get out on to the street and do their own versions anyway."

BACKSTREET GAMES: Neil Buchanan's latest collection is to be displayed at Woods Restaurant, Tunbridge Wells, until September

"The sporting side will inspire people – of course it will – but they will be out in the street, chalking the pitch out and playing their own version. That's where the art is – it's the backstreet version of the Olympics."

Punters can buy limited-edition prints of the Backstreet Games pieces, but Buchanan is very pragmatic about the art world.

"I thought about how many people who have followed me over the years actually go into poncy art galleries... a very, very small percentage. So I wanted to try something different by bringing it to places like Woods."

"At the end of the day, all art is, is really a picture. You either stick it on your wall or you don't – hopefully, people will stick mine on their wall and if they do it's a privilege for me."

Since his retirement from TV, Neil Buchanan has been the subject of a number of rumours.

"I've been asked to do the jungle, Big Brother, all of them... but no, not for me. I don't do the celebrity thing – it just doesn't appeal."

And why would he need to? With three Bafta

Awards to his name, Buchanan was for a long time the darling of children's TV.

"With Art Attack, I was just putting the mischief into the art, making it accessible to people. There was already Tony Hart and Rolf Harris, but because Art Attack looked quite modern it made the others look quite dated."

"We won three Baftas and were nominated 12 times – we became the yardstick by which they measured everyone else."

Fame came hand in hand with the show's success, but this has never been something that has caused much bother in Buchanan's life. He said: "I remember some kids came charging towards me – my little girl said 'Watch out, Dad, there's some kids coming up' and I replied 'Darling, they paid for this holiday'. That is something I will never forget – the audience put me where I am now."

However, he could never have imagined the level of fame he would acquire long after his Art Attack retirement. Even now, if you type into an internet search engine the name Neil Buchanan, by the time you press the B button the phrase 'Neil Buchanan Dead' arrives on your screen.

"It was all pretty grim. It was about five years ago. There was a gang of idiots around at the time who used this new medium called Facebook to dig at celebrities."

"Unfortunately, the rumour happened just as we went on a family holiday to Wales and there were no phones or signal or way of contacting people. It was just as we got there and I didn't know about it for a week. My mum, who was 75 at the time, had several people coming up to her and saying they were awfully sorry to hear about my death. And no one could get in touch with me for a week."

His loyal Art Attack audience was naturally shocked and the rumour spread like wildfire across the social-networking site.

"There was a lot of confusion because at the time Tony Hart died and there was also the tragic episode with Mark Spait, so you had two TV artists who had died and then the rumours about me, so people mixed a lot of stuff up. But that's the world we live in. I don't give two hoots about it other than it affecting my mum."

• Neil Buchanan will introduce Backstreet Games at Woods Restaurant, Tunbridge Wells, on Tuesday, July 17; the display runs until Sunday, September 9.

Basque in the flavours of some Spanish dishes by our seaside

THE Williams & Brown Tapas Bar in Whitstable is totally in keeping with the classy seaside-town surroundings. It is not overstated, there are no flashing lights, it is just a simple restaurant... a simple idea that oozes quality and attention to detail.

The restaurant is predominantly a tapas bar, as the name suggests, although there are other fish dishes and paellas on the menu to maintain the Spanish theme. Estrella is the beer of choice, while the cheapest bottle of Hispanic wine comes in at £15.50.

After recommendation from our attendant to decide on five or six dishes for two people, our choices began to flow from the kitchen. The chef decided, and quite rightly, to start us off with a lighter dish – almost like serving up a starter.

The manchego with membrillo ewes' milk cheese and quince jelly (£6.95) arrived first and blew me away. The sweet quince with the sour manchego was a match made in heaven, while the chilli it was served up with added spice to an excellent collection of flavours.

In a very European start to the meal, our next dish of Basque chorizo and salchichon (£6.25), which we combined with the left-over manchego, creating our own aperitivo.

A huge bowl of deep-fried whitebait with aioli dip (£5.95) arrived as a stop-gap before our more meaty dishes – well, we couldn't eat in Whitstable without having a little fish! They were crispy and delicious with no hint of grease, but a good number of them were left behind as we entered the business end of the meal.

The dishes arrived at intervals of about five minutes, ensuring that each was given a proper airing on the table before the next arrived. Up next were the Albondigas meatballs in tomato ragout (£8.50), again cooked to perfection with no dryness – which can often be the downfall of a meatball dish. The tomato ragout smothered the beef, which tenderly fell apart on contact with taste buds.

Then came the most anticipated dish of the day, the beef Madrid, thinly-sliced ribeye steak, chargrilled and served with salad leaves and shavings of manchego (£12.50).

The four small pieces of steak still cooking in their own juices were top-quality. I usually go for a dollop of something with my beef, but this didn't need it. The flavours of the meat did it all. It was an excellent dish if a little pricey for the size.

Our final choice, which operated more as a side order towards the end, was the classic patatas bravas – deep-fried potatoes with spiced tomato sauce (£3.95). It was again a large bowl and a fair bit came home in a doggy bag.

The atmosphere was intimate, the staff were knowledgeable and the food was excellent, all for £59.15.

Now Whitstable is not quite the Costa Vasca, but it is beginning to do a good impression.

Former Ramsay chef learns how to brew

RENOWNED chef Angela Hartnett MBE has visited Shepherd Neame's Faversham brewery to find out about women's role in brewing for part of a BBC TV series.

Great British Food Revival will see chefs across the UK investigating forgotten food traditions. Canterbury-born Angela, who has worked with the likes of Gordon Ramsay, joined head-brewer Richard Frost to create 34,000 pints of the brewery's ale.

The pressure was on for the first-timer as she mimicked the women brewers of yesteryear, known as brewsters or ale wives. The 20-episode series is due to broadcast in the autumn.

New chef sets record at Tudor Park venue

A RISING star of the culinary world has become the new head chef at Tudor Park in Bearsted.

Fresh from winning a Europe-wide catering competition, Tom Biddle has taken up his new post at the age of just 25 – making him the youngest executive head chef among the Marriott Hotel Group's 58 UK-based hotels.

He has already clocked up 10 years of catering experience and says he "eats, sleeps and breathes food". The move to Tudor Park will see him leading a team of 12, serving up dishes for the hotel's restaurant and catering for up to 250 people at business banquets, golf events and up to 50 weddings a year.

A finest Kent roast is not just for winter

SUCCULENT meats, juicy vegetables and plenty of gravy... is your mouth watering? Of course, we can only be talking about the classic king of dinners, the Sunday roast

It is synonymous with the UK and we've all grown up with the idea of families getting together to enjoy this winning combination.

Its greatness as a meal has travelled overseas as many tourist areas in France and Spain will strategically place the roast dinner on the menu to appease hungry Brits.

But here in Kent we are taking the tradition of the Sunday roast to the next level. We all know it is easy to change a roast in accordance with the seasons. There are the filling vegetables of winter such as Brussels sprouts, cabbage and parsnips, or the lighter summer offerings like new potatoes, peas and runner beans, but it is the choice of meats here in the Garden of England that has changed the face of the roast.

Gone are the days when lamb, beef, pork or chicken were all that Kent had to offer. Be on the look-out now for roast goose with chilli carrots, roast duck with plum sauce... or even roast woodpigeon!

And let's not forget Kent's glorious coast, which offers up so many sumptuous fish dishes. Along the beaches, our restaurants often promote their freshly-caught cod or plaice – or maybe shellfish are more your thing.

The choice of dishes that Kentish folk can proudly call 'locally sourced' provides an extra joy to our Sunday lunch.

Here are six places in which to savour the experience.

Walnut Tree Aldington

Why here...

The Walnut Tree is a warm, friendly pub and restaurant. It offers affordable lunches from midday to 2pm Monday to Friday; starters are £1.50, main courses £3.50 and desserts £1.50.

On the menu...

Tuesday to Thursday evenings has two courses for £10. Friday and Saturday evening is 15 per cent off your bill, while Sunday lunches cost £6.50 including a choice of five meats.

How to book...

The Walnut Tree, Forge Hill, Aldington TN25 7DT

Walpole Bay Cliftonville

Why here...

The Walpole Bay Hotel and Living Museum with its unique art gallery of nupery art, as seen on TV, is open from 10am-5pm. The venue is open for breakfast at 7am and serves snacks and cream teas through to dinner. Pre-booking is required. There is an outdoor terrace with fantastic views, so it's ideal for both winter and summer, while the hotel has a ballroom, a snooker room and two bars.

On the menu...

There is a fantastic five-course Sunday roast available every week for just £19.95 and £10.50 for children. A resident pianist entertains diners during meals. There is only one sitting, at which you will need to arrive at 12.30pm for a 1pm start. It is best to book in advance.

How to book...

Walpole Living Museum, Fifth Avenue, Cliftonville CT9 2JJ
phone: 01843 221703; web: www.walpolebayhotel.co.uk

The Swan Westgate

Why here...

The Swan at Westgate is renowned for its function room, restaurant and spacious bars with a comfortable feel-good factor and is just a very nice place to spend time and eat well.

On the menu...

The carvery is second to none and available midday-5pm on Sundays. Booking is advised! There is a selection of roasts with vegetables plus great vegetarian options at £8.99 per person.

How to book...

The Swan, 75 Sea Road, Westgate-on-Sea CT8 8QG

Waggon at Hale Chatham

Why here...

A well-run family pub with good food, good wine and beer and a friendly atmosphere. Families are always welcome and in the big garden is a mini family farm with chickens, guinea pigs, rabbits and Crackling the miniature pig. Proprietor Emma Pearson said: "We do not try to be anything more than we are – a warm and friendly country pub offering real food and drink, selected, prepared and served by a friendly team."

On the menu...

The home-cooked food menu covers all tastes and pockets, with simple light bites to the ever-popular traditional Sunday roast, served every Sunday from midday to 6pm. A three-course meal costs £14.95. Booking is advisable to avoid disappointment.

How to book...

Waggon at Hale, 179 Capstone Road, Chatham ME5 7PP; phone: 01634 400800; web: www.waggonathale.co.uk

Beachbrow Hotel Deal

Why here...

Beachbrow Hotel and its Waterfront restaurant is a small family-run business with helpful and friendly staff. The restaurant and bar have beautiful views over the Channel and its white cliffs.

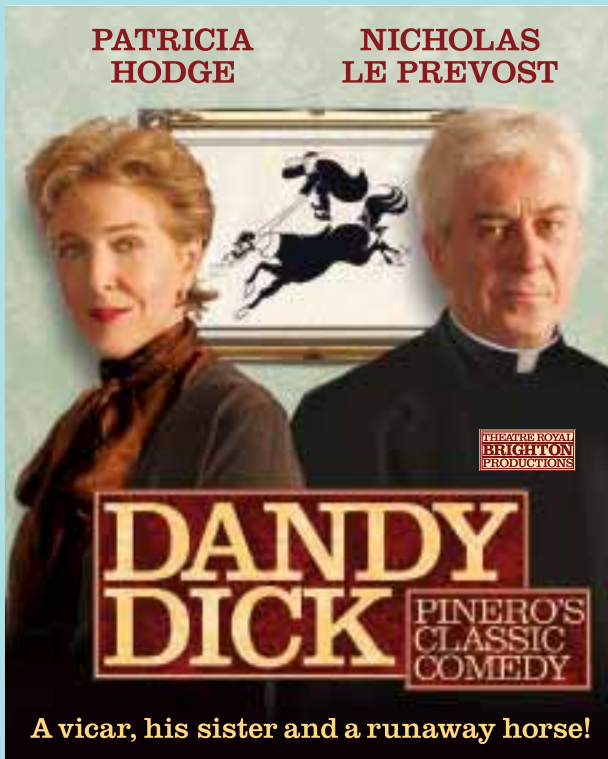

On the menu...

Sunday roasts are second to none. Choose from Alkham Valley beef, fruit-fed pork, free-range chicken or duck and Romney Marsh lamb. All vegetables are sourced locally and cooked fresh on the day.

ARGUABLY the best band to come out of Coventry since The Beat, The Enemy have announced a Kent date on their much-anticipated UK tour.

The indie trio will head to the Leas Cliff Hall in October off of the back of their third and latest album Streets In The Sky.

The group formed in 2006, with their debut 2007 album We'll Live And Die In These Towns topping the charts and singles Away From Here and Had Enough gaining the band top-10 hits and an army of diehard fans.

Their second album, Music For the People, was released in 2009 and charted strongly at No 2. Tickets cost £18.50 and are available now.

For the bride and the groom Wedding fair

The Kennington, Ashford

Saturday, June 30
10am-4pm
01233 629028

BRIDES-TO-BE and enthusiastic grooms can pop along to Ashford's newest wedding fair at The Kennington.

The newly-refurbished venue in Ulley Road, Kennington, will show off some of Kent's finest wedding paraphernalia.

Exhibitors will include experts in stylish wedding cars, photography, floristry, cake designs, chair covers, bridal hair and make-up, wedding dresses and even marriage stationery.

You can see the wedding-day fashion show by Happily Ever After at 2pm.

The show is free to enter and there will be a complimentary finger buffet, tea and coffee. The Kennington also has a licence to hold civil ceremonies.

Quarterman the highlight Jazz festival

Maidstone town centre

Fri and Sat, June 29-30
01622 678777; www.maidstonetowncentre.com

MAIDSTONE town centre hosts its jazz festival this weekend.

Some of the best performers from the UK jazz scene will be heading to the county town for a riot of music.

The undoubted highlight on the Friday will be Sir Joe Quarterman performing with the Jezebel Sextet at Pizza Express from 8pm.

On the Saturday, the Invicta Jazz Orchestra will play in Jubilee Square from 2pm to 4pm, while at Pudding Lane, Dr Jazz will play from 10am to 12.30pm, followed by Java Jam from 1.30pm to 3.30pm.

At Gabriel's Hill, The Jamie Moore Dave Reay Quartet play from 10am to midday, followed by Hannah Bolton at 2pm to 4pm.

The String Theory Trio will perform at Maidstone Museum.

Taking sports to a new level Olympic effort

The Marlowe, Canterbury

Monday, July 2, at 7.30pm 01227 787787
www.marlowetheatre.com

JUST in time for the Olympic Games, the Reduced Shakespeare Company brings The Complete World of Sports (abridged) to Canterbury.

The entire history of athletic competition is revisited in a marathon of madness that sees the world's greatest sporting events shrunk down to theatrical size.

Among the many questions answered will be: Is darts really a sport? Which is more boring, cricket or baseball? Who invented cheese-rolling and why isn't it in the Olympics?

The Reduced Shakespeare Company is a three-man comedy troupe that takes serious subjects and reduces them to short, sharp comedies.

Tickets are priced at £16.

COMMUNITY

Our city has something for everyone to enjoy

IDEAL to visit at any time but particularly attractive in the summer, Canterbury is one of the most attractive cities in Britain and receives thousands of visitors each year.

And it also boasts what is increasingly rare these days – a wide range of local stores offering distinctive goods and services.

The Burgate and King's Mile areas of the city are particularly popular in this respect and have some of the finest independent stores anywhere in the south of England.

Many food stores specialise in the produce of the Garden of England, which is also served up in eateries – meaning meat, vegetables, fish, wine and beer really are locally sourced.

And this week on Wednesday, July 4, it is the official Independents' Day – a support-your-local-shop campaign inspired by the US's national day of celebration.

The cathedral and its surroundings are recognised by UNESCO as being of worldwide importance, while there are many other buildings of historic significance, including sections of the original medieval city wall with its towers and a Roman villa.

It is also the home of Kent County Cricket club, while punts ply their way past parks and open spaces through the river, which flows through the city centre.

But as well as a city with a rich past, it is one looking very much to the future with an excellent range of shopping facilities, hotels, cafés, bars, pubs and clubs.

The winding streets offer treat upon treat as shoppers can choose from unique products unavailable elsewhere; the friendly service of small stores is a feature of Canterbury's attraction to visitors.

The city is famous for its bookshops – an important feature for an area that is home to top-class educational facilities such as the University of Kent and Christchurch University.

The rebuilt and extended Marlowe Theatre opened its doors last year and is bringing top names in music, drama, dance and comedy to the city, while the more eclectic Gulbenkian also has a wide range of events including music, comedy and visiting speakers.

There is a flourishing music scene in the city's pubs and there was even a Canterbury Sound in the 1970s featuring bands such as Caravan.

Nowadays, the Lounge On The Farm festival is one of the most popular in the UK and has attracted top-name acts in recent years, including Echo And The Bunnymen, Dexys Midnight Runners and The Streets.

For a mixture of great shopping opportunities away from the clone stores that dominate so many towns, entertainment and top-class food and drink, Canterbury is a must-visit location – whether you live on the doorstep or make a special journey to enjoy its unique charms.

7 December, 2012

Come with us for a festive break in some of our favourite places on the planet. Bordered by Italy, Austria, Hungary and Croatia, the former Yugoslavian state of Slovenia is less than 2 hours flying time from Stansted. Better still, Lake Bled, our base for the weekend, is just 30 minutes drive from Ljubljana airport and our hotel is a stone's throw from the lake. The Christmas Market in Ljubljana, Slovenia's charming capital, is one of the most splendid and evocative in Europe. Just across the border in Austria, the riverside town of Wlach offers more festive goodies at its Christkindlmarkt. Both countries have the Euro as their currency – currently the exchange rate is at its most favourable since 2008.

INCLUDED:

- Escorted throughout abroad
- All travel and excursions abroad
- 3 nights, half board at the Jelovica Hotel, Lake Bled
- Return flights with Easyjet from Stansted to Ljubljana – cabin bag included (add £22 per checked in bag up to 20kg – Free when you book by 7 July)

DAY OUT

Do you have what it takes to demonstrate your skills and become a knight of the king's court?

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

ON your marks, get set and go to Dover Castle for Medieval Olympics on special days throughout July, when King Henry II and the bravest champions assemble to put on 12th-century-style games.

Families are welcome to come and try their hands at the skills that made a fighting man – or woman – of the period.

The king will be in residence at his mighty stronghold, Dover, looking for the boldest young squires to join his jousting team.

He will scrutinise them as they are put through their paces by his great knight William the Marshall.

Under Sir William's fearsome glare, young knights will be taught how to joust and use a sword and find out if they have what it takes to become a knight of England at the court of King Henry II.

The king will not only be seeking skills on the battlefield. At his palace, furnished to the height of 12th-century luxury, only those with the finest courtly manners will thrive.

Young visitors will learn how to charm their noble masters and mistresses at lessons in chivalry given by the beautiful Queen Margaret, daughter-in-law to King Henry.

William the Marshall and King Henry II will be waiting for a fresh crop of knights to take on the challenge of the tournament – which of Kent's young squires and ladies will take up the challenge?

Dover Castle is open daily from 10am-6pm, with Medieval Olympic character days on Saturday and Sunday, July 7-8, Saturday and Sunday, July 14-15, and Saturday to Tuesday, July 21-31.

Normal admission prices apply of just £16.50 for adults, £14.90 for concessions, £9.90 for children and £42.90 for a family ticket. English Heritage go members free.

Visitors can also take the opportunity to explore some of the castle's other amazing areas, including the Secret Wartime Tunnels, now featuring the exciting and dramatic Operation Dynamo: Rescue From Dunkirk experience.

One-off gig

Shepherdswell village hall
Sunday, July 8
2.30pm-5.30pm
www.westcourtango.co.uk

THE Westcourt Tango group will host Argentinian musicians Carlos Quilici and Javier Fioramonti at Shepherdswell village hall next week.

The pair, who play Argentine Tango with the traditional guitar and bandoneon, are stopping off for a one-off live gig as part of a European tour. Their repertoire comprises well-known traditional tangos, presenting an ideal opportunity for people in east Kent to dance to authentic Argentinian music.

And even if you're not a dancer, just sit and listen to what promises to be a stunning performance of tango.

Tickets are priced at £10 and include refreshments. Parking at the hall is limited.

TALENTED new artists will be exhibiting their sculptural work in the fabulous surroundings of Godinton House gardens.

The work will be displayed throughout the 13 acres of formal and wild gardens, where crisp topiary or shimmering wild grasses make the perfect backdrop.

Exhibiting at Godinton for the first time this year, Scottish artist Rob Mulholland will be showing Vestige – eerie mirrored figures that shimmer in and out of their landscape.

The dream-like theme is continued with Linda Johns's ethereal wire figures and woven web forms.

Cecilia Buchanan is celebrating the Olympics with a synchronised swimming team in the formal pond.

Open from 2pm-5.30pm.

RETURNING to Charlton Park for a third year, Durham University's award-winning Castle Theatre Company is performing Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream.

The picnicking audience will be transported to a world of woodland fairies and theatrical endeavours while following four young people's quest to find their soul-mates, despite what life – and roguish pixies – throw at them.

The two previous Castle Theatre productions, Much Ado About Nothing and Macbeth, were well received by local audiences and enjoyed by visiting overseas students.

Tickets £12 adults, £7 children and students.

Daisy's daring you to watch

Open-air play

Hever Castle, Edenbridge
Wed to Sat, July 18-21
01732 866114
www.heverfestival.co.uk

THE Hever Summer Festival swings back into action month with the totally-spiffing play Daisy Pulls It Off.

Inspired by Angela Brazil's schoolgirl novels, Denise

Deegan's comedy brilliantly parodies the life and soul of a girl's boarding school of yesteryear... "all gym-slips and hockey sticks, a sort of St Trinian's without the delinquency".

The plucky heroine, Daisy Meredith, with the help of her best friend, Trixie Martin, overcomes a series of trials and tribulations by being honourable in all things.

The original West End production of Daisy Pulls It Off started back in 1983 at The Gielgud Theatre.

Tickets start at £14.

Literati unite Medway has a new festival

Eastgate House, Rochester
Sunday, July 22
Midday-4pm
www.rochesterlitfest.com

A NEW event for Medway launches in July under the banner of the Rochester Literature Festival.

With the first festival 'proper' planned to coincide with National Poetry Day in October 2013, a number of fringe events take place this summer to get things started.

The first of these is The Garden Poetry Party, on Sunday, July 22, at Eastgate House Gardens.

Medway poet Bill Lewis will be joined by storyteller and festival founder Philip Kane, The James Worsley Public Address Method and singer songwriters Abigail Zeiring-Delmado and Didi Bergman.

Comperes for the afternoon will be stand up comics CO Jones and Mat Wills.

Entertainment includes open-mic sessions and a children's creative corner.

THE Kent and East Sussex Railway will remember the First World War with a living-history spectacular.

Ninety-six years ago, troops were massed in the South East before being sent by train to fight in the first few days of the Battle of the Somme, a battle that commenced on July 1, 1916.

The days feature 50 historians in military and civilian costume, while authentic equipment at the station will include a general service wagon, Lewis machine gun cart and period photography booth.

Visitors can also take advantage of a steam train and enjoy a ride in one of the beautifully-restored vintage carriages.

Buying a new home can help the environment – and your bank balance

ACCORDING to the New Homes Marketing Board Foundation and Zero Carbon Hub, owners of new homes built to the latest regulations could benefit from halved fuel bills.

The organisations calculated the potential annual savings that could come from living in a different type of energy-efficient home (2010 standards) and compared these with an upgraded Victorian home.

On this basis a four-bedroom, detached new home could be 55 per cent cheaper to run, meaning a saving of £1,312, while a one-bedroom groundfloor flat could save 47 per cent – £426.

Homes built from 2016 could reduce bills by 79 per cent, a reduction of £1,865.

"We have always been aware of the energy savings that can be made living in a brand-new property", said Jo Richards, marketing and corporate manager at Hillreed Homes, an independent developer for more than 35 years.

"Legislation over the years, coupled with development in the knowledge of what is needed to provide warm, draught-free homes run by efficient boilers, has steadily improved the capacity of homes to 'hold' their heat, thereby reducing carbon footprint and high fuel bills."

Neil Jefferson, NHBC Foundation's director and Zero Carbon Hub's chief executive, said: "The cost data we have produced, while not guaranteed, gives an indication of the kind of monetary savings that could be made in the long term. We believe this kind of data could be useful for people making the decision to buy a new home."

Patience paid off, says property leader on visit to former airfield

ONE OF the UK's senior property experts has visited Kings Hill to see and hear how the private and public sectors can work together to create new developments.

Liz Peace, chief executive of advisory body the British Property Federation, was invited by Alex King, deputy leader of Kent County Council, and Andrew Blevins, managing director of Kings Hill developer Liberty Property Trust UK Ltd.

She heard how, 23 years ago, Liberty Property Trust UK Ltd and Kent County Council formed a collaborative public-private sector partnership to develop Kings Hill.

In that time it has evolved into a community with a series of residential villages, a business park with more than 200 businesses creating employment for some 5,000 people and supporting retail, leisure and community amenities.

It has since been named the country's most successful new village in a national report on placemaking, ahead of Prince Charles's Poundbury development in Dorset.

Kings Hill's design, the provision of public and private amenity space, transport links, car-parking and community provision were cited as being particularly successful.

"It just goes to show how good design and a patient approach pays off," said Liz Peace.

"It was a great opportunity to see how Liberty and Kent County Council have worked together to transform a derelict airfield into a stylish, cohesive community that has become one of the most sought-after business locations in the South East and an aspirational place to live."

"I was particularly impressed by the variety of amenities on site, which is a great benefit to those working and living at Kings Hill."

Working with a network of senior debt, mezzanine and equity providers our partner assists in the packaging and financial structuring of projects to ensure best use of capital. Funding of up to 90% of total development costs is widely available for developers with a demonstrable track record.

Transactions are typically in the range £1 million to £50 million.

Please contact Steve Donnelly for an initial assessment of your funding requirements on 01892 619289 or 07739 514 350.

Second-generation Mazda5 will make waves for its rivals

Driving

IT IS refreshing that resources can be found for an exciting new sports car at a time when the motor industry is rightly obsessed with slashing emissions and fuel-consumption.

Mind you, it's rather bizarre that one of the partners in this project is Toyota, the high-profile champion of petrol-electric hybrid cars, notably the sector-leading Prius.

Not so hard to comprehend, though, when you realise that Toyota's obsession with hybrid power has not come without cost – and I'm not talking about millions of yen invested in the technology.

For the Japanese giant is currently stuck with the 'boring' label once attached to every worthy project tried by Nissan, eventually forcing a change of tack that has spawned such big-sellers as the Nissan Qashqai and Juke crossovers.

Toyota will hope its new jointly-produced GT-86 coupé can do something similar, restoring glamour the company enjoyed when famous for sports stars like the Celica, Supra and MR2.

Its partner in the venture, Subaru, could also do with an injection of credibility from its BRZ version of the same new car; the brand now has a fantastic new diesel engine to offer loyal fans, but its image as a glamour brand was damaged when the old rally-bred Impreza was blitzed by increasingly weird facelifts and dubious add-ons like gold alloys.

So, Toyota and Subaru have common ground here, apart from the fact that the former owns a sizeable chunk of shares in the latter.

They appear to have hit their joint target spot on. The new car is a compact, smart low-slung coupé with a traditional front-engine/rear-wheel-drive layout for best possible weight distribution, and aggressively priced from £24,995, with lots of kit as standard including alloys, push-button engine start and dual-zone air-con.

That makes it a unique proposition around that price unless you count the Mazda MX-5 roadster.

The joint car also has an interesting powertrain: a typical Subaru flat-four engine that sits low in the car and contributes to the car's agility and poise. Defying the modern trend, it also lacks turbocharging, though this is not expected to last once aftermarket specialists get their hands on the little sportster.

A slick six-speed gearbox is fitted as standard, but both marques are offering the car with a six-speed auto (£1,500), allowing F1-style paddle changes on the steering wheel.

Despite being designed to boost the sporting image of both marques, though, the GT86/BRZ is not without some practicality: 2+2 seating has been added so that a couple of children or small adults could squeeze into the back, thus helping an enthusiast argue with the other half that it can just about function as a useful second car for the family... though don't expect Gran to come out for a ride

Double acts combined thinking delivers true sporting pleasure

IT'S TWICE AS NICE:

Toyota's GT-86 coupé and Subaru's BRZ go against the current trend for fuel efficient and low emission cars to deliver two real drivers' cars

DON'T LIKE

... how long we've had to wait for both Japanese marques to come to their senses and produce a car with much-needed character and glamour.

NOT SURE

... there is quite enough practicality in the cabin to attract the take-up the car really deserves, but the kids will just have to lump it now and again.

REALLY LIKE

... the fact that someone (Toyota, surprisingly) has realised that there is still a market and desire for affordable performance motoring.

XJ no longer living in the past

By Steve Loader

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

JAGUAR'S original XJ6 arrived around the time that rock band Jethro Tull released its classic 1969 track Living In The Past.

Company-founder Sir William Lyons called the new car "the finest Jaguar ever" and, like the Tull single, it was a hit, but one that condemned Jaguar to living in the past for some 40 years.

Stuck in an automotive version of the plot from Groundhog Day, the company heeded Jag traditionalists and continually tried to re-create the look of the original XJ until it looked horribly outmoded against increasingly sharp-suited German opposition.

At least until 2010, when, emboldened by the success of its radically-different and smaller XF saloon, Jaguar broke the cycle of retro re-creation and receding sales with an all-new XJ.

The squarish grille remained, but old-fashioned twin headlamps were replaced by wraparound slitted arrays, while a wide low-slung body and glassy rear end gave this new XJ a unique style and swagger in its class.

Suddenly, it's fashionable again to be seen getting out of the big Jag at red-carpet events, political summits, conferences and the company car park. The XJ even made an appearance in several episodes of the recent American hit TV thriller series Homeland, alongside another UK import, actor Damian Lewis.

And though now a huge car when compared with the original, this impression is quickly dispelled behind the wheel, for the latest XJ harks back to the original 1960s car in one key area – agility and handling.

Admittedly, those buying the long-wheelbase version tested here probably won't drive themselves, and chauffeur James would get earache for attacking tight bends with the boss lounging in the back.

But the fact the big cat can do this at all,

SUBSTANCE AND STYLE:

Jaguar's XJ impresses at every turn; from stunning look to superb interior, the carmaker has created a car worthy of its more famous predecessors though, impresses as much as its obvious style and charm; an all-aluminium body some 150 kilos lighter than its next closest rival helps, but near-perfect 51:49 weight balance between front and rear and Jaguar's well-known chassis savvy are also key factors.

Like the exterior, the interior is also quite unlike anything else in its sector; from continually re-creating the Jag look of old, the proud UK premium marque has gone ahead and created a whole new contemporary style worthy of early days when Jaguar established itself as a manufacturer of style and innovation with classics like the E-Type roadster and Mark II saloon.

The cabin is airy and spacious anyway, thanks to a large glazed area, standard-fit panoramic sunroof – with opening front section – and a fascia that arcs away to be bounded by wood or carbon-fibre detailing below the screen – a feature that would have been at the front of the dash in 'trad Jag' models of old.

Another 'new Jag' detail is the large automatic gearbox selector knob that rises from the centre console once activated by the ignition – a stylish and unique feature.

Prices start at £55,515 for the standard car – the stretched model (LWB), with an extra 12.5cm of legroom, adds £3,000 to the price.

The car oozes quality even in entry-level Luxury trim – our car was an upper-middle range Portfolio (from £66,515) model.

Three engines are offered: a 5.0-litre supercharged V8 petrol unit with its supercar acceleration (0-60mph in just 4.7 seconds) grabs the headlines; an unblown version of the same engine grabs none; while a 3.0-litre V6 diesel takes all the sales and an ever-growing stash of awards.

The silky diesel – tested here – delivers a sensible 275bhp, quite enough to move the relatively lightweight Jag around with pace if needed, yet it can average almost 40mpg with care.

First GEAR MOTORING NEWS

Rapid makes it special 'six'

SKODA has revived the name Rapid, last worn – without great justification – on a 1980s rear-engine coupé from the Czech marque.

It should be more deserving on the boot of a thoroughly-modern all-new compact saloon due later this year, designed to sit between the current Fabia supermini and Octavia family range, and increase the Skoda line-up to six models.

Mazda means real business

DARTFORD-based Mazda UK is aiming to make more inroads into the company-car sector by launching an aggressive contract hire rate of £229.99 per month on the tax-efficient 2.2-litre diesel Mazda6 Business Line hatchback.

It has followed up by also promising delivery of this well-specc'd-up version within 14 days at a time when some marques are struggling to meet fleet demand.

Great estate from Hyundai

HYUNDAI launches the classy-looking Tourer (estate) version of its impressive new-generation i30 family hatchback on Monday, July 23, priced from £16,195.

The Korean marque says the newcomer has greater luggage capacity than key competitors – 528 litres and 1,642 litres with seats up and folded flat respectively – and even outshines some models from the market segment above.

New Mazda5 making the right waves

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

OLD VW camper-vans and minibuses are cool. Values have shot up in recent years as people bought into the surfer image delivered by these old clunkers.

Never mind that the air-cooled rear engine/rear-driven layout makes for a primitive life on the road, they still deliver in buckets and spades when you pull up at the beach.

And maybe this is the place in the sun Mazda sought for its second-generation Mazda5 MPV – how else do you explain the extravagant wave design along the flanks?

But King Canute could have told the Japanese marque this whole wave thing can be tricky – in a bid to look cool, you risk being a washout.

Whether you like the waves or not, though, there's no arguing with the practicality of this three-row seven-seater.

Following on from its predecessor, it has sliding rear doors – powered on the flagship Sport spec tested here – making life particularly easy.

The two rearmost seats – usually the preserve of kids – can be pressed into service for adults if the middle row is slid forward slightly, while all-rear seats fold flat to create a van-like cargo area.

You might argue, though, that this is not really a full seven-seater; the centre seat in the middle row is a bit miserly, even though it does flip up to allow easy entry/exit for back-row passengers.

But that fact and those controversial waves are the only big criticism here; like its predecessor, the Mazda5 is a rarity in the MPV sector because it offers a driver-pleasing chassis borrowed from the Mazda3 hatchback – no slouch in the handling department.

This counters my frequent complaint that many MPV-owners have such vehicles pressed on them by the need to cart kids and dogs about at weekends, only to endure the type's usual sloppy handling for far longer periods during the weekday commuting.

The Mazda, on the other hand, is a car for everyday needs. The driver still gets a high and commanding view, but, without the suggestion that the door handles may brush the tarmac when cornering, it doesn't corner like a hatchback – but you could not expect that from any MPV unless it had a bone-jarringly firm ride.

Fit and finish inside is good, with a typically well-organised dashboard and good stowage.

Prices start at £18,175 for the 115ps (113bhp) 1.8-litre petrol budget option, while the 150ps (148bhp) 2.0-litre petrol (from £19,365) is the sporty alternative – 0-62mph in 11 seconds at the cost of an official combined 41mpg fuel consumption – even if it doesn't really offer a great deal more than its sister.

The smart money, though, is on the 115ps (113bhp) 1.6-litre diesel (from £20,660) as tested here. It's the slowest option but doesn't feel it and is well refined, even though an MPV cabin allows plenty of scope for boom and reverberation. With an official combined 54.3mpg, it is also by far the most economical.

Golden girl's Olympic joy achieved after shedding blood, sweat and many tears

Kelly Holmes' double-gold winning exploits at the Athens 2004 Olympic Games remain one of the most memorable moments in British sporting history. Now, in a book which takes a look at all Great Britain's gold medal winners, author Clive Ellis tells the story that led to her success

TWO images, 24 hours apart, symbolise the ethereal highs and suicidal lows of the Olympic experience. The first freeze-frames Paula Radcliffe's despair after pulling out of the marathon in Athens; the second captures Kelly Holmes's pop-eyed expression of pure joy as she crosses the line to win the 800m.

Five days later, Holmes ran a brilliantly controlled race to add the 1,500m title and seal the greatest performance by a British athlete at a single Olympics.

"To get two golds feels like somebody else in my body has done it," she admitted. "It doesn't feel like me." At 34, she was the oldest woman to win an Olympic title at either distance.

For much of her career Holmes had been buffeted by injury. In statistical terms, she was already Britain's finest ever female middle-distance runner, but she needed the imprimatur of a world or Olympic title to prove she was a competitor as well as a time triallist. The sheer talent had been evident from the moment she finished runner-up in her first cross-country race at the age of 12.

Holmes' mother, Pamela, had been only 17 when she became pregnant by her Jamaican boyfriend. The relationship collapsed before Kelly had celebrated her first birthday and she spent time in a children's home before being reunited full time when her mother and stepfather-to-be, Mick Norris, set up home together in Hildenborough.

Holmes faced another period of adjustment when her white step brothers were born.

She was only 13 when she won the junior 1,500m at the English Schools' Championships in Plymouth. Television coverage from the Los Angeles Games the following year, and in particular Seb Coe's 1,500m victory, fired her imagination even further. By now, Holmes had decided to be a physical training instructor (PTI) in the Army, turning down the offer of an athletics scholarship from the University of Minnesota.

Holmes underlined her promise as an athlete when she won the senior 1,500m at the English Schools' Championships in 1987, but she turned her back on competitive sport after joining the Army in February 1988.

She began her training as a PTI at Marchwood, near Southampton. One of the instructors was 400m hurdler Kris Akabusi, who encouraged Holmes to start training with Southampton Athletics Club. She began competing again in 1989, but Army duties still took precedence, especially after she had taken up her first instructor posting at Imphal Barracks, near York, in 1991.

Two factors combined to convince Holmes she could explore her potential as middle-distance runner without compromising her Army career. One was the persistence of Wes Duncan, a coach with Middlesex Ladies, who had seen her compete at the Inter-Services Championships.

The other was the sight of a distance runner whom she had beaten regularly as a junior, Lisa York, competing at the Barcelona Olympics. In 1992, Holmes ran regularly for Middlesex Ladies and, by now based in Beaconsfield, Buckinghamshire, she set her sights on qualifying for the 1993 World Championships in Stuttgart.

Holmes had beaten her personal best to qualify for Stuttgart and lined up in her first major championships; despite breaking the English record with a time of 1min 58.64sec, she was eliminated in the semi-finals.

Holmes still believed she could fulfil her athletics ambitions from within the Army and began working again with her original coach, Dave Arnold, from Tonbridge Athletics' Club.

In 1994, she followed a 1,500m silver medal at the European Championships in Helsinki with gold at the Commonwealth Games in Victoria, British Columbia.

She deferred a PTI training course so she could train for the World Championships in 1995, going unbeaten in the early part of the season before losing to the Algerian, Hassiba Boulmerka, in the 1,500m final in Gothenburg. She then broke the British 800m record to win the bronze medal, and went even quicker in Monte Carlo a few months later, breaking Zola Budd's 12-year British record for the 1,500m, running a time of 3min 58.07sec at the Sheffield Grand Prix meeting in June 1997.

Five months earlier Sgt Kelly Holmes had despatched the letter confirming her resignation from the Army before spending three months in South Africa.

Her immediate focus was on the World Championships in Athens. Holmes was the favourite for the 1,500m, but she suffered a recurrence of an Achilles tendon injury a fortnight beforehand and pulled up in agony in her heat; a torn Achilles and ruptured calf muscle were diagnosed. The following season was all but a write-off, though Holmes recovered sufficiently to win a silver medal in the 1,500m at the Commonwealth Games in Kuala Lumpur. She was also awarded the MBE for services to the Army.

In 1999, Holmes' training was so badly restricted by illness and injury – she also fell out with Arnold – that she competed solely in the 800m at the World Championships in Seville, failing to reach the final.

Arnold was back in favour for Olympic year, but a calf injury refused to clear up and Holmes was forced to rely on the British selectors giving her discretionary places for both the 800m and 1,500m in Sydney. Her expectations were minimal, so a bronze medal behind Mutola and Stephanie Graf, of Austria, in the 800m (and her fastest time for five years) constituted a major achievement.

An astonished Holmes said afterwards: "You couldn't have written it like this. A bronze is a gold to me." She finished seventh in the 1,500m final.

The all-too-familiar pattern returned to haunt Holmes in 2001. She was diagnosed with chronic fatigue syndrome at the start of the year and was still short of fitness when she competed in the World Championships in Edmonton, finishing sixth.

Holmes had to have an ovary removed at the end of the year, after suffering persistent stomach pains, but was back on a high in 2002, when she won the 1,500m at the Commonwealth Games in Manchester. But Holmes lacked basic speed in 800m at the European Championships soon afterwards, finishing third.

Holmes lost motivation, but recaptured her appetite for the sport when she began training with Maria Mutola in Johannesburg at the end of 2002, helped by Mutola's coach, the American, Margo Jennings. A successful indoor season at the start of 2003 added to Holmes's sense of well-being, only to be stopped in her tracks by a persistent calf injury.

The low point came when Holmes was sharing an apartment with Mutola and Jennings in the Pyrenean ski resort of Font Romeu.

She wrote in her autobiography, Black, White and Gold: "After one particularly frustrating day, I suddenly felt as if I couldn't cope any longer. I stood in the bathroom of our room in the apartment, locked the door and stared in the mirror, feeling utterly miserable. There was a pair of nail scissors in a cup on a shelf. To this day, I don't know what made me do this, but I picked them up, opened them and started to cut my left arm with one of the blades. One cut for every day that I had been injured."

She was still short of confidence at the World Championships in Paris, but made an 11th-hour decision to compete in the 800m finishing second behind Mutola.

Mutola had remained largely injury-free for the bulk of her career, but at the start of Olympic year she injured her hip (ironically after tripping when she tried to get past Holmes in an indoor 1,500m in Birmingham). Holmes herself was so used to setbacks that even when fit – as she was in the build-up to Athens – she remained suspicious of her good fortune. She eventually decided to double up, forcing Jennings to make it plain that her primary loyalty was to Mutola in the 800m.

The Athens schedule required Holmes to run a potential six races in nine days, but she was able to win both her heat and semi-final in the 800m without expending too much energy.

In the final, Holmes was content to sit near the back of the field as a fierce pace was set, using Mutola as her marker to make up the deficit on the second lap. They vied for the lead in the final straight, but Mutola's injury-hit preparations were starting to tell. Holmes kept her form, just managing to hold off the fast-finishing Moroccan, Hasna Benhassi and Ceplak. Holmes' time, 1min 56.38sec, was her fastest since 1995.

Less than 24 hours later Holmes was lining up in the 1,500m heats, any mental tiredness offset by an aura of calm self-belief. Jennings advised Holmes to hang back in the final and though there were moments when she appeared to have allowed too big a gap to open up she was in such control of the race that she was able to look around her at the start of the final straight before launching her decisive attack.

HOLMES, ON ATHENS VICTORIES weeks later.

A placement with the Army Youth Team in north London allowed Holmes to prioritise the Atlanta Games in 1996. Her training was hampered, not for the first or last time, by ovarian cysts. Holmes' mood improved during a training camp in South Africa but, as she confided in the BBC's Olympic Diaries, she was short of confidence and self-belief.

"I'm feeling very negative, but nobody knows what I'm going through," she admitted.

A stress fracture to her left leg put Holmes' participation in doubt, but she ran in pain (and with the aid of pain-killing injections) to finish fourth in the 800m, just a tenth of a second behind bronze medallist Maria Mutola, and last in the 1,500m final. She came home on crutches, but was in better spirits when she shut-

Gemili's fast off the blocks to secure Olympic berth

By Fred Atkins

sports@kosmedia.co.uk

YOUNG sprint sensation Adam Gemili has confirmed he will represent Great Britain against the likes of Usain Bolt in pursuit of Olympic gold this summer in the 100m.

The Dartford teenager confirmed on Tuesday that he would accept the place he won in the UK trials at the weekend, after previously saying he might concentrate on the World Junior Championships in Barcelona.

Gemili, 18, who chalked up the fastest time over the distance in Europe this year with 10.08 seconds will now compete in both events and could be pitted against Jamaica's Bolt, whose world record is 9.58 seconds.

Remarkably, he only started training for the Games at the beginning of the year, after previously focusing on a career in football.

"I am going to the Olympics," Gemili said. "I just hope I don't get beaten too badly. People train their whole lives to do it. I'm lucky that I've come into athletics at the right time and I've qualified. It feels amazing."

After setting the fastest time in qualifying at the trials, 10.20 seconds, Gemili finished second behind Dwain Chambers in the final in 10.29.

Although this was fractionally behind the Olympic qualifying time of 10.18, Gemili's personal best of 10.08, set last month, earned him a place that first he was unsure about accepting.

"I can't believe it, I don't know what to say," he said after the race. "I've got to thank everyone that supported me. I was just trying to go and run and finish in the top two. Now I'm potentially going to the Olympics."

Chambers said Gemili had pushed him all the way in the final and added that the teenager reminded him of himself as a younger athlete.

"In a situation like this I have to draw on my experience and that's what enabled me to win," Chambers said. "He (Gemili) is fantastic, and it's great to see youngsters coming through. That what gives us old boys a kick up the backside and we need that. And looking at him remembering myself in that position wanting to beat all the old boys, now we're getting a taste of our own medicine. I still feel young at heart, and having a youngster like Adam is fantastic for the sport. I believe he's going to be a fantastic attribute for the relay and he's going to do fantastically well in the world juniors."

Jimmy will go all the way to the top, says Lashings chief JIMMY Adams' initial success with Kent has come as no surprise to the man who worked with him for much of the past decade.

The Kent coach spent over 10 years with the Maidstone-based Lashings World XI before moving to the St Lawrence Ground this season, and his former chairman David Folb says he's amazed Adams was on the market for so long.

"Jimmy will go right to the very top," Folb said. "He was always very interested in coaching. A few seasons ago we had Jimmy and Andy Flower here at the same time and they were very much like a brains trust."

"I just don't understand why nobody snapped him up beforehand."

While Flower went on to become England's head coach, aside from a spell with West Indies under-19s, Adams didn't land a major coaching role until Kent came calling.

"I think Kent have made a phenomenally good choice in appointing him," Folb said. "He has a tremendous knowledge of the game and has exceptional management skills.

"In all the years he spent with us nobody ever had a bad word to say about him because he's just such a great guy."

Lashings were due to play in Kent this week, but their annual fixture with Sutton Valence School had to be cancelled, apparently due to poor ticket sales.

Folb declined to comment on the cancellation, but the team will be back in the county next Friday when they take on a Dartford Schools XI at Hesketh Park.

Dobriskey on the brink, as Green leaps at chance

LISA Dobriskey and Jack Green both seem certain to be turning out in the red, white and blue of Team GB at London 2012 after strong performances last weekend at the trials in Birmingham.

Snodland 400m hurdler Green came second behind world champion Dai Greene to ensure he would be part of the team, but Ashford's Dobriskey has to wait a while longer yet before learning if her place is secure.

The Commonwealth Games gold medallist came runner-up in the 1,500m, just outside the qualifying time. However, the decision not to take her to the European Championships in Helsinki this weekend was seen by many as a sign she will be picked for this summer's Games.

Dobriskey, 28, who grew up in New Romney, has fought back from set-backs this year – most notably when she was diagnosed with blood clots on her lung.

She said after the race: "I was told by a specialist that that was it, just give up and take six months off, you won't be able to run."

"I'm looking at this as such a bonus and I'm so grateful to be back."

European under-23 champion Green, meanwhile, was disappointed with his performance.

He explained: "It's the worst technical race I've had all year. First hurdle, it all went wrong so I went into panic mode and thought 'just run!' It will sink in soon."

BLOW: ECB say Kent's defeat to Essex will stand

Cloud cast over Essex defeat as clubs admit scorer made an error

ESSEX will escape without even a slapped wrist after the scoring fiasco that cost Kent two potentially crucial runs during their Twenty20 clash at Chelmsford.

The derby was poised for a thrilling final over, but confusion over the correct score meant that when Mark Davies faced the final ball from Graham Napier the scoreboard said Kent needed four to win – when two would have been enough and a single would have clinched a tie.

Davies tried to smash the final ball to the boundary but was bowled, meaning Kent lost by three runs.

A spokesman for Essex confirmed an error had been made.

"At the end of the 19th over the umpire penalised Essex six runs for a slow over rate," he admitted. "At 19.2 overs the incorrect score was still on the scoreboard as the scorer didn't see the signal. While this penalty was being sorted out Matt Coles scored two runs, but this was not seen by the scorer, who was told it was a dot ball."

"Their (Kent's) interpretation of it was that this would have meant the batsman would have played a different shot."

Neither county reported the incident in their match reports, but radio commentators did pick up on it and one source confirmed there had been a significant amount of bad feeling after the game.

The county have not made a formal complaint – contrary to a suggestion from Sky's Nasser Hussain during commentary on Kent's defeat to Middlesex on Tuesday night.

"We and Essex both had scorers at the match," a Kent spokesman said. "There was a mistake, but we are keen to move on from the situation. We will not be making any further comment."

While the laws of cricket make no specific reference to penalties for incorrect scoring, saying only that two scorers should be present and that they should regularly consult each other, under the England & Wales Code of Conduct and Spirit of Cricket there is provision for disciplinary action.

If the umpires consider any action to be "unfair" the offending club can be fined and docked points.

Adrian Phillips of the ECB said: "This game and matter was investigated by the ECB and has now been closed. The game's result stands."
